BURIED UNDER PAPERS.

Between Litter and Fires Life In De Quincey's Home Was Lively.

new out of the morbid value he set upon papers and their not being disturbed. He was in the habit of accumulating these until, in his own words, he was "snowed up," which meant that when matters reached such an extremity that there was not a square inch of room on the table to set a cup upon and no possibility of making his bed for the weight of papers guthered there; no chair which could be used for its legitimate purpose, and the track from the door to the fireplace, always kept open until the last, was completely obliterated so that he had not even place in which to set his foot-then De Quincey locked the door upon his paper treasures and turned elsewhere. At his death there were at neast a half dezen such places "papered" by him and being maintained at no small expense,

Such a thing had been experienced as his actually "papering" his family out of house, but in fater years his DR. SMITH J. MANN daughters learned how to guard against such a contingency

De Quincey usually spent the evenings with his family, who looked forward to these hours with much pleasure. Upon the arrival of the newspaper he would render the news in his own quaint manner, questioning the various members of the group about him and illuminating the various subjects touched upon with a wealth of memories, good stories or human experlences until the happlest flow of real conversation sprang from the circumstances of the moment.

He was not a tranquillzing compan ion for nervous persons to live with as those nights were the exceptions on which he did not set fire to something It was a common occurrence for one of his daughters to look up from her work and to say ensually, "Papa, your hair is on fire!" to which be would respond casually. "Is it, my love?" and a hand rubbing out the blaze was all the notice taken.

On one occasion, when the maid DR. R. V. LEEP rushed in to announce that Mr. de Quincey's room was on fire, he hasten ed to the rescue of his already "snow ed up" apartment, refusing all sug gestions that water be poured upon his treasured papers. Armed with a heavy rug be disappeared into the burning room determined to conquer without water or perish in the attempt. while the members of his affrighted household trembled for his safety outside the door, locked to prevent the abhorred water from being poured in. Presently, after occasional bursts of smoke and a very strong smell of fire. all were assured that the danger was over, the victor emerged triumphant ly from his fight with the flames, and the dreaded element having been subdued for the evening all retired in a state of thankfulness.-From Caroline Ticknor's "Hawthorne and His Pub-
