LUCILLE LOVE AT THE GRAND NEXT WEDNESDAY

The fourth story of Lucille Love will be shown in pictures at the Grand Wednesday night, July 14th. The story runs as follows: As the fourth installment opens the lion is trying to break down the door of the desperate girl's shelter, and is only foiled by a spear in Lucille's terrified hands. But Loubeque is not so easy to turn from his purpose of recovering the papers, which mean the accomplishment of his revenge and the disgrace of General Love. He instructs his native slave to ellect dry grass and teaches him how to weave a rope. This he stretches from his own hut to Lucille's and ignites the end in his hut. In a short time the fire eats its way to the hut where the daughter of his enemy is asleep. To make assurance doubly sure, Loubeque's native summons the tribe to which he belongs, and which is hostile to that by which Lucille was captured, to assist him. Lucille scarcely awakened from her sleep, is driven from the hut by the flames and almost runs into the arms of Loubeque. He struggles with her and attempts to seize the papers. But Lucille's savages are at hand and attack the spy before he can recover the papers. The natives, however, are very superstitious and deathly afraid of the "imprisoned fire" in Loubeque's automatic revolver. One shot is enough. The tribe falls down before him in fear and subjection.

In the meantime Lucille has made good her escape and has entered the chief's hut. But while the natives are afraid of the white man, they are not afraid of the savages which support him, and a terrible battle ensues between the rival tribes.

In order to stop the carnage, Lucille resolves to take advantage of the superstitions of the natives and dresses herself all in white, improvising her garments from sacks and white cloths. Climbing on the great white elephant she goes among the warriors and the fighting ceases like magic. All bow down to the sacred objects, the color white, the sacred elephant and the sacred healing woman. But Loubeque is not discouraged, and at this juncture there comes to his aid a woman from the tribe to which his slave belongs. He sends the woman to the chief in whose house Lucille is carefully guarded with instructions to tell him that she is from a neighboring tribe which is friendly. She is to say that her master lies ill and at the point of death, and that she has heard of the wonderful white healing woman who cured the chief's daughter, and has been sent to get her to heal her master. The ruse succeeds, both the chief and Lucille herself are completely taken in, and Lucille starts immediately on horseback with the false guide. In the meantime her companion, under Loubeque's direction, has dug a pitfall and cleverly covered it with brush. When Lucille's horse comes cantering along the trail bearing his rider on her errand of mercy both crash into the pit in one of the most sensational pictures thus far shown in the series. The horse is killed instantly and Lucille lies like one dead. The two slaves of Loubeque climb down into the pit, the woman takes the papers from the office of Lucille's dress. She returns them in triumph to her new master, who decides that while he lacks the sacred armolet which is still around Lucille's neck, his present mission is but half accomplished.

GIVES HUERTA ONLY SIX WEEKS MORE OF LIFE.
Vera Cruz—"Only General Blan-quet and General Maure are holding President Huerta's entire army back from revolt," was the assertion here of Alfredo Noriega, an intimate friend of Blanquet, who arrived in Vera Cruz on his way from Mexico City to Madrid. "Huerta would leave the capital if he could," continued Noriega, "but he does not dare, fearing that if the soldiers learned he was trying to do so they would rend him in pieces. He is desperate. He dare not even send his wife away, lest it be the signal for his downfall. He dismisses every government official who tries to get his family away from the capital. It is generally feared he is going insane from drink. Indeed, some think he is already insane. Terror reigns in Mexico City, and it is increasing."

Asked how the late President Madero was killed, Noriega answered, "President Madero and Vice President Suarez were taken out behind the penitentiary by Colonel Francisco Cardenas, stood against a wall and shot. Then Cardenas fired a number of shots into an automobile and told his story of an attempted rescue. I did not like Madero, but that was the way he died. I think Huerta personally ordered the killing of both Madero and Suarez. At least he was responsible for the order, which Cardenas received directly from General Mondragon. Americans are right in blaming Huerta for Madero's death. Jorge Huerta, the president's son, has made $2,000,000 in gold in the past year. He is a terrible man, and has killed scores to satisfy his personal grudges. Ex-Foreign Minister Momeno has made $500,000. Recently, just before retiring as the rebels advanced, General Joaquin Maas rifled the vaults of the Bank of Coahuila of $200,000 in gold. Ex-Minister of the Interior Urrutia was making $10,000 daily, but killed so many people secretly and blamed Blanquet for their deaths that Blanquet demanded his retirement. Huerta is fabulously rich. He says: 'The Americans will not let me be killed. They can't recognize Carranza if he kills me because they would not recognize me after Madero was killed. In expectation of an explosion in the capital Blanquet got me away by getting an appointment for me as second secretary of the embassy in Madrid. Hundreds of other Mexicans are seeking excuses for leaving. I prophesy that when General Villa nears the capital the army will revolt and kill Huerta. Then will come a reign of unspeakable terror. I give Huerta a fortnight.'

Some people here who have autos say they will not risk a drive on such roads as that to Bandon on Sunday when everyone who owns a machine is on the road. There are so many sharp corners around projecting bluffs on this road, where the grades are considerable, that the one driver in fifty who is reckless is liable at any time to cause a disastrous collision. Perhaps, if the county court would station watchmen at a few of the sharper curves on Sunday and prosecute the worst offenders, it would do more than anything else to discourage the speeders who seem to care so little for their own safety, to say nothing of other peoples'.—Coquille Sentinel.

Greater Interest.

The attendance and interest is growing better each evening at the Church of the Brethren. The Evangelist, Elder S. E. Decker, is powerful and fearless in warning against sin in its modern guise, and earnest in holding up the only remedy available to counteract it. Everybody is welcome.
