PRONOUNCING ENGLISH.

Going Astray on the Correct Use of

"u" and "ew" Sounds. A curious feature of the English language as it is spoken in this part of the United States is the prevalence of a dual system of pronunciation. The dictionaries tell us unequivocally that we should pronounce "dew," "knew" and "stew" as we do "few." and that "student," "stupid" and similar words should be enunciated as if they were spelled "stieudent" and "stiupid."

Nobody, apparently, disputes the correctness of this manner of pronouncing "u" and "ew"-yet here is a rule very much more honored in the breach than in the observance. Except for stage folks, the faculties and some of the students of schools and colleges and a few persons who make a point of precise speaking, the academic sound of "u" is disregarded almost universally.

It is by no means through ignorance that people say "stoo" and "stoopld." There are worthy persons who seem to feel that a good American really ought to say "stoo" and "stoopid." They think, apparently, that the orthodox "u" and "ew" are Anglicisms and are used in this country only by persons pedantic or "affected."

Of course, for all practical purposes one way of pronouncing is as good as another and usage has made both forms correct. Nevertheless, the right use of "u" and "ew" adds music and variety to the English language, and the younger generation might do well to pronounce according to the dictionary and gradually overcome an "Americanism" that has no real good excuse for being.-Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Spoiled Musicians.

Rubinstein disapproved of marriage for musicians. Just before his death he spoke sadly of his Russian lady pupils. "What have I wasted all my time on them for?" he asked irritably. "Every one married! It's too provoking! Here they are, spoiled forever for art life. What did they study for?"

The London Musical World remarks that "those who ask why we have no great lady composers may be left to think of these things."

A Narrow Range of Choice. Bylvia, supple and slender, and Aunt Belle, bulky and besign, had returned from a shopping tour. Each find been trying to buy a ready made suit. When they returned home Srivia was usked what success such had to Sylvia. "I god minus protty med. had Aunt Melie to gotting so for that about all she can get rands made to an una smatch. The cirt reaged her cowned bests. Youth's Compains.

A BRAVE FOOL

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

George Carroll was sauntering across a field as free from care as the day he was born. He was looking up at the sky, over which white clouds were sailing as lazily as he walked. He was all communications to the company, a city chap, who had been ordered by his physician to go to the country, even though the January winds were blowing cold, and recuperate. He was thinking as he walked what a humdrum thing life was, to be sure, how free from any kind of risk or excitement his own individual life was and how when he was "bowled over," as he expressed it, it would probably be by an animalcule, so small that he could not see it, entering his system, increasing and multiplying vigorously, the colony at last eating him up. .

Strange it is how often fate is doing with as what we least suspect. At the moment this last idea entered George Carroll's brain a death dealing force was driving at him from behind. A shadow, accompanied by the sound of horse's hoofs, shot transversely before him. Turning, he saw a girl on horseback in a red coat, moving between him and a bull that was making for him, the girl glancing backward as she rode to observe the bull. She was about to turn and ride back again when the bull caught sight of her, abandoned the straight line he was fol lowing in the direction of the man and turned his attention to the girl.

Now, George in regard to all matters pertaining to the country was very stupid. He did not realize that he was or had been in any danger. He did not gather from what he saw that this girl, seeing the bull going for him, had leaped a fence and ridden between him and his enemy for the purpose of turning the animal from him to berself. Instead of thus taking in the situation and getting out of the field as soon as possible, he stood looking at the bull chasing the girl.

The inclosure was about ten acres. and George stood near the middle of it. The girl led the bull as far as possible from him, then turned and, eluding the animal as dexterously as a toreador, galloped away in the opposite direction. By that time it began to dawn upon the city man that the horse and the girl were being pursued by the buil for the purpose of goring. But not even yet did he realize that she had taken this danger upon herself for the purpose of saving his life; that had it not been for her a pair of horns would have taken him in the back, broken it and the earthly spark of his existence would have gone out forever. What occupied George Carroll's mind to the exclusion of all else was the danger that threatened the girl and what he could do to relieve her from her perilous position. The only thing he could do was to run for the fence as fast as his legs could carry him and r it. If he had done girl would have made her exit as she had made her entrance-by urging her horse over that same fence. She was waiting for him to get out of the field before securing her own safety.

It is singular how a brave man may be a fool, or, rather, is not a good deal of what we call bravery folly? George by his stupidity was leaving both himself and the girl in danger. She could see him standing there gaping at her. but was so close pressed that she was unable to make a sign to him to fly for his life. Nearing the opposite end of the field, she turned her head to see George running toward her! She could have jumped the fence, but when she saw the man she was trying to save hurrying again into danger, instead of saving herself she turned about and started again across the If she went near the man the bull might leave her and turn upon him. So she galloped diagonally across the field, making an effort at a sign for him to leave it. But he did not understand and, turning, continued his oursuit of her. Then followed events in such quick succession-so quick that George could scarcely separate them. He saw the oorse stumble and fall; he saw the bull's horns go into the horse's belly; he heard a report, and the bull, too, fell to the ground. A man dropped a gun, dashed to the fence and, jumping it, ran to where the girl was trying to get up from the ground George and the man reached her at the same time. The man lifted her up, and she stood on her feet. "Are you killed?" asked the man.

"No; not even hurt." Then the man turned to George. "For heaven's sake," he cried, "how in the world have you escaped the fool killer all these years?" "He's not a fool at all," said the girl; "ho's a brave man. He didn't realize his own danger, he was so intent

When George Carroll realized what the girl had done for him and how be had stupidly come very near being the cause of her death he was paralyzed. As it was, he had been the cause of toe loss of her horse and a bull worth $100 had been shot. Fortunately George had a fortune and could repair the monetary damage. The rest of it could not be paid for in that way But fate when George was walking seems the field regretting the uneventher efforts to be fitted.
