

JOURNAL WILL MAKE GOOD

Thos. C. Clark of Elk River, was among those victimized by a man named Hallawell, who went through this section several months ago soliciting subscriptions for various publications. Later developments proved that Hallawell was a crook and had no authority for soliciting orders for any of the magazines or papers. Mr. Clark had paid Hallawell for a subscription to Hoard's Dairyman, and when it did not come after a reasonable time he wrote to the publication, getting the following reply, which we publish so that any others who were similarly victimized may send in their names to the dairy journal publishers:

Fort Atkinson, Wis., July 8, 1914
Mr. Thos. C. Clark, Port Orford, Or.

Dear Sir: We have your letter calling to our attention that you subscribed to Hoard's Dairyman through Mr. E. Hallawell. This man is not a representative. We are, however, making good on this proposition and have credited your subscription one full year in advance. Any information that you can give us about this man will be appreciated, and if any of your neighbors have subscribed to Hoard's Dairyman and have not received the publication we would consider it a favor if you would ask them to write us. Yours very truly,

W. D. Hoard & Sons Co.

HOW'S THIS FOR AN UP-TO-DATE FISH STORY, WHAT!

Klamath Falls—A well that, in addition to spouting water, spouts real fish, is the latest phenomenon in Klamath County. The new well is at Klamath marsh on the reservation and was sunk by cattlemen to provide water for stock.

According to Captain O. C. Applegate, a pioneer, the men, after going down two feet, struck a heavy flow of water, in which fish came up. The pump was installed over a pipe eight feet below the surface and the flow continues.

The theory generally advanced is that an underground stream was struck. One perhaps which after running on the surface, dropped into the earth, as does Lost River, near Bonanza.

IT WAS ONLY THUNDERSTORM

Portland—The budding ambitions of Coos Bay to have its name tagged on one of the sea battles of the war probably will have to wither and die. The pitiless logic of our naval expert, ably abetted by the figures of the weather map, explain the heavy firing that was heard off Cape Blanco Wednesday afternoon.

It was only a thunder storm, says the expert. Reverberations of thunder at sea sound exactly like the roar of big guns. The similarity is heightened when you never have heard the sound of big guns at sea.

Here is the evidence:

The weather map shows that 0.02 of an inch of rain fell at Marshfield and Latoosk soon after the "battle" startled the summer vacationers. The cloud had simply moved in from the sea.

It was foggy at the time, so that the people who were stretching their ears on the beach could not see whether it was cloudy at sea or not. Since the noise was heard in the day time, they could not see the lightning.

"The reports," said one dispatch, "ended in rolling reverberations."

When the fog lifted there was not a sign of ships at sea. Neither the Danzig nor the Nuremberg nor the mysterious Jap that was supposed to be fighting the two rushed into the beach to keep from sinking.

Bathers declared that the "firing" lasted for about five hours. It would tak just about 20 minutes to decide a battle between the warships on the Pacific coast. In five hours every dreadnaught of the warring nations could be destroyed.—Telegram.

SHATTERED "WARSHIP" EX-CITES PEOPLE OF ASTORIA

Astoria, Aug. 28—Great excitement prevailed in Astoria last night when the late train from Seaside brought the news that a vessel was piled up on the beach at Columbia. The stricken ship could be seen plainly from the train, her masts and spars showing black and sharp in the haze that hung over the beach all of yesterday. Her rigging was torn and tangled, her topmasts splintered and her mainmast cut off at the board and resting on the foremast for support.

Everyone got the same idea at the same time—the ship, crippled and dying, had cast itself on the beach after attack and defeat at the hands of a warship—the firing heard off Coos Bay was explained, for here was the result of it, piled up on the sands at the very door of Astoria. Wires began to buzz, country town telephone central operators were rousted out of bed and the lifesavers were hurried to the scene. The city held its breath waiting for their verdict. Finally it came:

"Found the wreck. Lies broadside to the breakers. No one aboard. No boats in sight. There was no loss of life. It's a tree."

MARSHFIELD DAILY RECORD ISSUES BIG BOOSTER EDITION

Last Saturday the Marshfield Record issued a big booster edition, consisting of twenty-six pages. Several pages of pictures of Coos Bay points and particularly portraying the progress on the Willamette Pacific railroad were included. It was a paper that a city much larger than Marshfield might well feel proud of, and shows commendable enterprise on the part of the Record.

GERMAN DYES NEEDED BY THE U. S. GOVERNMENT.

Washington—Every effort will be made by the United States to reopen the way for importation of German dyes and chemicals, the lack of which threatens to throw a million American textile workers out of employment. Representative Metx of New York has told Secretary Bryan that without these imported colors the Government would be unable to print stamps and currency, as the acid-proof products of the German plants could not be reproduced in this country.
