PORT ORFORD NEWS.

From the Tribune:
The deal pending between John W. McKenzie, P. H. Poole and John R. Miller, for the latter's general merchandise store, has been closed and the new owners have taken possession of the store. Mr. Miller and wife will leave before long for Southern California, where they will spend the winter. Messrs. McKenzie and Poole will make a strong combination, and the new firm will no doubt meet with much success.

The fishermen at Rogue River are making fairly good catches, some 600 or 800 salmon being delivered at the cannery each day. Several boats are drifting at night and two seines are being hauled—one at the old Lyman Woodruff place and one at the mouth of the river. Something over half of the fish are Silversides, the rest being Chinooks. In a haul made last Saturday the lower seine caught a Chinook that weighed 54 pounds. This fish, caught in the spring, when fat, would have weighed from 60 to 70 pounds.

The Randolph came up from Rogue river Friday afternoon. After landing some fifteen tons of freight for the Elk river fishery she returned to Yaddoburn, sailing from there the following day for Astoria with about 70 tons of canned salmon. This is the largest shipment of fish from the river in some time, and was insured for over $15,000.

A band of 1200 sheep were in Port Orford yesterday, being driven to Oakland, Or., by C. L. Beckley of Dixonville. The sheep were bought for Mr. Beckley by Will White. They came mostly from Southern Curry, and as high as $4.50 was paid for some of the choice ones.

Samuel Jordan, an old resident of Southern Curry and Del Norte counties, died recently at the Brookings hospital after a lingering illness of several years. A sister of the deceased, Mrs. R. Moore, resides at Brookings, and a number of nephews and nieces live in that vicinity. For some time past Mr. Jordan has made his home with Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Moore near Harbor.

CURRY COUNTY MAN HAS FINISH FIGHT WITH BUCK

Early Monday morning, Walter Miller decided to try his luck after a buck. He scarcely got out of the limits of our city when a large two-pointer put his head up out of brush for a target. Mr. Miller took a shot at his head, the ball taking effect at the butt of the horn and coming out behind the ear, on the same side of the head causing only a flesh wound. At the crack of rifle however, the buck fell and rolled over a few times down the hill, as if stone dead. Mr. Miller went to within a few paces of where it lay set his gun down, walked up and took hold of its horns to see where it was hit, when instantly the buck sprang to his feet and declared war. Mr. Miller was afraid to let go of his horns and after a hard struggle succeeded in throwing him to the ground, where he held him with one hand reached in to his pocket for his knife which he opened with his teeth and made an attempt to cut his throat. Just as his buckship felt the knife blade upon his throat he kicked the knife out of Miller's hand, several feet in to the brush, at the same time recovered his feet again. The buck charged time and time again, and all Miller could do was to save himself from the sharp points of his horns by pushing his head to the ground. The longer the fight lasted the stronger the buck grew. This emphasized the fact to Mr. Miller, that if he won the fight he would have to do it pretty quick. He realized that it would be nothing less than suicide to let go the buck's horns and try to reach his gun, and it looked like a hopeless chance to lead the buck to where it was some thirty yards distance. This however, seemed to be the only avenue of escape for Mr. Miller, and he commenced to work to that end. Every time the buck would charge, he would back toward where his rifle lay; which he finally accomplished after a long hard struggle. After coming within reach of his gun, he was unable to hold the buck with one hand and use the gun with the other, so round after round they went, until finally Miller got his enemy to the ground in such a way that he could hold him by one horn long enough to grab his gun and shoot it. Had not Mr. Miller maintained presence of mind during the entire encounter, he doubtless would have been seriously if not fatally hurt; but as it was he came out of the struggle with only a few abrasions of the skin on the legs below the knees, from the buck's horns.—Gold Beach Globe.
