Remains of Joseph's Well.

The remains of the original Joseph's well are to be found at a spot situated directly on the rail route from Salem to Memphis, about two miles southeast of Cedar. The well itself is in the courtyard of some tenements belonging to the army of occupation. Near by is "the citadel," the second largest mosque in Egypt. The well bears some of having been hatched up. Yet it is easy to see that Joseph's discovery could not have been to great as one might imagine, for this well like all the wells of Egypt is of a certain fixed water intake, and those of today, and doubt would have been able to yield but little water with any regularity. Moreover, when the Nile is low, these wells are quite dry. —New York Sun

SOCIAL PARADISE.

Owning a Parterre Box in New York's Opera House.

MERE MONEY CANNOT BUY ONE

It Takes More Than Wealth to Enable an Outsider to Break into the Famous and Ultra Exclusive "Golden Horseshoe" at the Metropolitan.

Anybody with money enough can become the owner of the costliest art treasure in all the world if it is for sale. Anybody can have the finest yacht or the biggest Fifth Avenue mansion or the longest string of matched pearls. This means mere money.

But the attainment of a box at the opera is without precedence about as near achieving the kingdom of heaven on earth as it well can be. Riches alone cannot buy entrance therein.

Not one millionaire in a hundred owns a box at the opera.

Why?

Just jot down these symbols:

N 6410-8

Here we have social New York's choicest problem expressed algebraically. "N" is the unknown quantity for which a given value is required. "6410-8" is the uncertain quantity which the mathematicians call a "variant," and "a," "b" and "c" are the known quantities which can readily be correlated by referring to the real estate records on file in New York city.

In a word, when the rich man solves it, he knows exactly how much a box at the opera costs to own outright. In few simple, he and his heirs and his heirs forever, if he has the value of "N."

The correct answer has only been reached five times in thirty years. Strangely enough, too, this right result each time is never the same. Each solution, where "N" has been properly found before the lucky solver begins on his problem, gives higher figures than the one before.

Today the correct answer is $120,000, the price for which one of the coveted boxes was recently sold.

The symbol "N" means, in a word, the approval of the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera. If you can possibly get it and have the $120,000 lying idle to boot, then you can become the proud possessor of a box at the opera—the one and greatest desideratum of those who would have impeccable social prestige in New York, which means everywhere. It also means that boxes in the "golden horseshoe" are the costliest of any opera house in the world. The right to have your six places at every performance of the opera is a more adjunct to the ownership. It is the fact that you, personally, own the box which is the acme of the whole transaction. It means that your social standing is all, flawless, unimpeachable, unassailable, wholly perfect!

Now let us get right down to figures and solve our problem of the opera box. We must assume, of course, that we have "N" figured down to a nicety—that is, we have the unqualified approval of the directors of the opera, the hardest quantity of all to obtain.

Our known quantities are a matter of record and easy to obtain to the last penny. We find, then, as follows: Our "a" is the value of the building; our "b" is the value of the land; our "c" is the mortgage upon the property as a whole. And the divisor, 35, is the number of boxes in the parterre at the opera, of which there can be just thirty-five, no more and no less.

So, we can now substitute figures for our algebraic symbols or letters and work out the problem by simple arithmetic. The building is figured at $1,000,000 and the land at $2,500,000. Besides this, there is an equity in a left building where scenery is stored, which is figured at $100,000. You have just as much a share in the dingy left as you have in your brilliant red and gold box at the Metropolitan Opera House. So the total real estate value is $4,000,000. From this you must subtract the mortgage, which is $1,000,000. Our result, then, is $3,000,000. Now, divide this by 35. We get $85,714.28. That is the cost price of a box at the opera. The balance is the seller's profit.

Look to this fact—the remaining or "left" box holders of thirty years ago have quadrupled their money. They shipped in $50,000 apiece then, and now their individual holdings are $120,000 each and growing every season. Death alone ever parts an owner from his box, and then it stays in the family nine times out of ten. Why?

Simplest thing in the world—because the box is sure of a handsome income every year. A man could live in style from what his box at the opera would bring him if he had it.

Monday is the only night of the week at the opera. A choice box—and they are all choice except that some are cheaper than the rest for earlier or tardier purposes—can be rented out at a moment's notice for $2,000 for just the twenty-four Monday night performance. There are 120 nights and matinees of opera five performances a week for twenty-three regular weeks and six extra weeks. No thirty-six performances are still left after you have taken in your $2,000. But your tickets are cheap for these, say $150 for the six matinees, and you have $2,000 more or $12,000 in all. There's the $2,000 for the matinees and you have a net income of $12,000 from your $150, or $16,000 a month—New York World
