R. R. WORK PROGRESSING

Contractors Going Ahead As Rapidly As Weather Will Permit

In speaking of the progress being made on the Willamette Pacific railroad the Marshfield Record says:

Arriving yesterday afternoon by stage down the coast, Thomas Dixon of McArthur Brothers and Parks, accompanied H. Du. Huser to the district which is covered by the construction work between Coos Bay and tunnel No. 7, leaving on the eight o'clock boat this morning.

According to the distribution of steel for the bridges between Aeme and Marshfield, it appears the Umpqua bridge will not be completed until the railroad is graded and rails laid to Smith river.

Mr. Dixon says the steel for the large bridge across the Siuslaw river is now at Eugene, as well as that for the Umpqua river bridge. The steel for the Coos Bay bridge will be brought in mostly by way of San Francisco, although some is now at Eugene and will be transferred to vessels at Portland.

One shipment of steel for the Coos Bay structure came in some weeks ago on the Daisy Putnam from Portland and was delivered at North Bend.

The draw at Smith river, a few miles above Gardiner, is to be 150 feet wide.

Mr. Dixon said this morning the work going on all along the line and the grading will be finished within three months, under circumstances that have applied in the past few months. The work between Gardiner and Aeme is fully as far advanced as that between Coos Bay and tunnel No. 7, and is still being pushed.

There are two or three drawbridges to construct on the Tenuille lakes between Gardiner and the Siuslaw river, but they are not large ones and can be installed quickly.

Mr. Dixon was asked what, if any thing, he knew about the proposed extension of the Southern Pacific between Marshfield and Eureka, but he seemed very pessimistic over any such railroad building, saying there is scarcely any railroad building going on and under the present conditions, he does not believe there will be any new work started for some time.

"The Trey O' Hearin."

When Alan Law rescued Judith Trine, believing her to be her sister Rose, from the New York home of Henry Trine, they passed at once by motor car to Jersey City, where arrangements have been made for the marriage of Rose and Alan. Marrowphat, Trine's lieutenant, discovers their escape, learns that it is Judith and not Rose, who has fled with Alan, and, wild with jealousy, pursues his car overtaking theirs in a slum on the Jersey side. Judith, still pretending to be Rose, begs Alan not to let Marrowphat speak to her, and when Marrowphat makes a leap from his car to Alan's, the latter throws him violently to the street.

This incident occurs directly in front of the ramshackle tenement occupied by Red November and his gang of gun men—some of whom rush out, pick up Marrowphat and convey him to the room where November lies dying; in consequence of his injuries sustained in attempting to assassinate Alan in a previous episode of this series, Marrowphat promises to Trine's name, to avenge the death of November, and sends several members of the gang to try for confirmation of this promise. He then reneges the pursuit of Alan and Judith, again overtaking them and stopping their car by shooting a bullet through the windshield, which ignites the gasoline and blows up the car, but Alan and Judith continue without injury by hurried to the house of the minister who is to perform the wedding. Here, as Alan is about to be married to Judith, who is still impersonating Rose, Marrowphat bursts into the room, exposing the impersonation. Judith, struck in the face by Marrowphat and run from the house, getting away in the darkness, Marrowphat pursues her. When Marrowphat is back in town, he has headquarters in the back of a saloon near New York, he receives the message of the two boys, and at once writes in a letter to Alan, telling him that he has been rescued by them and is now in the hands of the police. Alan and Judith, who have been waiting for the news, are told that the police are on their way to the saloon. The police find Alan and Judith in a room at the top of the saloon, and after a short fight with Alan on the staircase, throw him from the house. In the course of this fight a kerosene lamp is kicked over and explodes, setting fire to the tenement. The fire alarm is turned in, but escape from the upper stories is cut off because of the blazing staircase. Rose appears at the topmost window and Alan, seeing all other means of rescue has failed, hauls himself up to the level of her window by means of a block and tackle in front of the warehouse across the street. He then swings himself across the window, where Rose is waiting, and so contrives her rescue, bringing her safely to the street.

Sale of National Forest Timber

The district forester at Portland, Oregon, is offering for sale eight million board feet of timber on the Tongass National Forest, Alaska. The timber consists of the Sitka spruce and western hemlock, and is situated on Cowie River, at the south end of Berner's Bay, on the mainland near Lynn Canal.

The timber is now being advertised for the receipt of competitive bids at the rate of $1.00 per M for Sitka spruce and 50 cents per M for western hemlock. The agreement with the Forest Service for the sale of this timber will allow approximately three years for cutting and removal; and an optional increase in the original stumpage rate, not to exceed 50 cents per M, may be made by the district forester after the first year of the cutting period.
