Floating dock at foot of Chicago Avenue, Fish & Pymale, $610.25.

This work was all designed by City Engineer Sawyer and constructed under his general supervision.

Mr. Sawyer has completed plans which have been accepted by the Council for Sewer District No. 6, comprising Edison from Fourth to South end, Douglas from Seventh to Ninth, Seventh from Edison to Douglas, Ninth from Douglas to Bandon, Douglas from Ninth to Tenth, Fourth from Douglas to Harrison. The estimated cost is $7,992.81.

He is now working on plans for sewers on Elmdale from Second to Thirteenth; Second Street from Baltimore to Fillmore; Fillmore from Second to County Road; County Road from Fillmore to Caroline; Caroline from County Road to Harlem.

Mr. Sawyer urges the building of these sewers as there is urgent need for them. He believes the city is more in need of sewers at present than of further street improvements.

The lower business district north of Second between Baltimore and Bandon, at least, should build their sewer as it is in greater need of them than any other section.

ANNIVERSARY NUMBER
With this issue The Recorder enters upon its thirty-first year of service to the people as a news medium and this issue is devoted to furthering the interests of Bandon-By-The-Sea among people with whom it will come in contact with in different parts of the country and to sum up, in a small way, for local readers the progress of the city during 1914. Although not as complete as we had wished this issue to be, we sincerely trust that you will pass your copy along or get other copies to send to people in other parts of the country, especially those in the eastern states, hoping that it will play its part in bringing people in touch with the conditions in this part of Oregon and thus induce them to locate here.

We are deeply indebted and wish to express our thanks to those who have assisted in getting out this issue and particularly those who have contributed articles and thus helped to boost for a bigger and better Bandon.

Stock Disease in the East
A letter from Muscatine county, Iowa, says that the writer in going to Tipton on Dec. 21, saw six graders at work digging a trench to bury about 200 hogs and 90 cattle, one load of which had been ready for market. They had been killed by the authorities on account of having the foot and mouth disease.

Cedar and Muscatine counties have been quarantined for some time but Muscatine is released now. For over three weeks no stock could be shipped and no poultry except dressed. No one could hold a sale and cannot now within 15 miles of Cedar county. The farms one which the stock became infected are not allowed to restock for nearly a year.

THE TREY O' HEARTS

The installment will be shown at the Grand Theatre next Thursday Evening, Jan. 7

Allen Law is pushed to the back of the desert, where he is carried at a mad pace, along the upper trail through the mountains and foothills and eventually into the desert. Using the "Victrolas," Allen follows the flight of the horse, escaping momentarily from the clutches of the desert.

Allen Law and Barcus of the affair, in his own home and starts off to find him. Rose and Barcus leave Allen and plan to follow.

Allen Law, Trine's car, come home to Allen, the butler, and the desert. He arrives at Mesa, takes up Marrowphat and sets off in pursuit.

Allen, a gentleman of Hopi Jim's money, to put it delicately, happens along the other trail, discovers the two horses and is puzzled over the matter when he is joined by several other, rough citizen of Mesa, who have started out to follow the fun provoked by what they have already seen. Murder being indicated, they decide a lynching party and set off for the upper trail.

Judith's horse, meantime, has run wild and into the desert. When he stops, Judith manages to release herself. She falls to the ground and the horse runs off and finally locates a water hole. Refreshed, Judith manages to climb on his back. The horse starts off on the desert trail away from the mountains.

Allen by use of the glasses locates the missing horse and presses on in a mad race. By midnight, he is overpowered by thirst and heat. Barcus and Rose follow upon the trail and find a series of hoof prints, they know that Allen has pursued Judith into the desert part of the desert. They are followed by the vigilantes, who are tempering to a mad race.

Allen Law takes her to a water hole under a tree. She dismounts and rests. Allen who is tired and thirsty does not observe her.

Allen Law, the sky darkens and a storm is brewing. A terrible wind storm breaks forth. Allen Law, who is helpless, is helped by the horse's back, pushes up to help in accident that he is seen by the vigilantes. Judith, realizing the danger, reaches her hand. Allen, on the trail, is seen by the vigilantes and they are all taken into the storm. Judith follows and finally overcomes him, when he falls exhausted down an embankment.

The storm is the only thing which saves Barcus and Rose from the vigilantes. In the course of their progress they pass within a few feet of Judith and Allen, the latter unconscious. Judith sees them, but says nothing and lies Barcus and Rose pass on in ignorance. When the storm falls it is night. Allen finally comes around. He staggers in his feet, climbs out of the arroyo and starts off again across the desert, paying no attention to Judith. She follows with the same patience as before. This time it is Allen who is in under necessity of helping the girl. When she falls to her knees, cold and exhausted, he wraps his coat around her and holds her in his arms. Exhaustion overtakes them both. Allen finally finds comfort in sleep.

Meanwhile Trine's car, after being held up by the storm continues on the trail, finally coming up with the vigilance committee. Marrowphat and Trine indicate that Allen is the murderer of Hopi Jim. There are two routes that form the southern barrier of the desert. The motor car strikes toward one—the committee toward the other. It is Marrowphat that first spies Judith and Allen. Judith snatches Allen's revolver from its holster. She has her own as well. Allen sleeps. When Marrowphat, Jim and the butler approach, Judith calmly commands them to throw up their hands. She forces Jim and the butler to carry Allen to the car. When Trine grows turbulent she forces Jim to carry him. Then jumping into the car with Allen and her father, she orders the chauffeur forward. Marrowphat and the butler, left behind, manage to attract the attention of the vigilantes. Taking the two men upon their horses the committee starts in pursuit of the automobile. Stopped at a water hole, the others get within pistol shot and capture the car. Judith answers by shooting the horse from under him. The car, now crippled, moves slowly, and the pursuing committee comes nearer. Barcus and Rose meanwhile have made the shelter of a prospectors' shack, overlooking the pass. Trine and the vigilantes are following the car and the the following morning. Approaching the trouble Barcus escapes the clutches of the vigilantes. He strikes the car and places the two men in the hills.
