THE STORY OF "THE WAGES OF SIN"

Mrs. Hope an employee of the Medford mills dies. Mr. Dean, the owner, adopts her daughter Ruth. Stephen Marley, cousin of the Rev. Geo. Brand who is in love with Ruth, is an unwelcome visitor at the parsonage. Brand secures a position for Stephen at the mill. Stephen makes the acquaintance of Rose Dean and her sister Ruth and shows his admiration for Ruth. Stephen strikes an acquaintance with Barbara Dale, a mill hand.

Rev. Geo. Brand proposes to Ruth. She refuses saying he must ask Dean. Dean consents. Stephen overhears and determines to win Ruth. He entices Barbara from home and then deserts her. Barbara's father forbids her to return home. She implores Stephen to marry her. He refuses. Ruth meets Barbara and tries to comfort her. Lieut. Wentworth, Rose's fiance leaves to join his regiment. Barbara again asks Stephen to save her from disgrace. He tells her if she will agree to accuse Geo. Brand and tell Ruth it was Brand who wronged her he will marry her. Barbara is horrified but finally agrees. Barbara calls at the Dean home and tells Ruth that it is George Brand who has wronged her. Ruth is overcome at the confession and her friends accept him. Stephen pays attention to Ruth and Ruth, anxious to get away from George and her friends accepts him. Stephen urges Ruth to marry him at once and late that night Ruth leaves a note for Rose telling her she has gone forever and departs with Stephen.

Two years later, Ruth and her baby in poverty are neglected by Stephen Juliana, an actress befriends Ruth. George Brand, now a revivalist recognizes her. He follows her home and offers to help her. Ruth, realizing her child is dangerously ill, accepts the aid. Stephen enters and demands money. He struggles with Ruth and finally overpowers her and flees with the money. Ruth rushes out and into a saloon and grabs a bill from the hands of Henry Wentworth. She retraces her steps and is followed by a policeman and Wentworth. They take her away and sentence her to prison. A few months later she is released, believed to be dying. Dean and Rose take her home. Ruth is about to retire when she discovers Stephen and his pal, Ned, robbing the Dean home. She wakes the house and Stephen tells his captors that she is his wife. Wentworth tells Dean that Ruth is a thief. The robbers escape and Dean orders Ruth from the house. She finds shelter with Juliana. The robbers hide and Barbara vows revenge. She is found by Ruth and confesses to her. Ruth leaves with Barbara and Juliana asks George to search for her. Ruth and Barbara find Stephen and demand the truth. Stephen leaves Ruth and is about to swim when George and a policeman enter. Ruth confesses the truth to George. Ned kills Stephen.

Ruth and George marry and return to the Dean home.

Our President

Patient and calm, in silent strength serene
Amidst the storms a beacon tower—
Friend, fellow citizen and president
To whom we give imperial power.
All eyes where breakers roar to him
are turned.
Uncrowned world leader of the hour
Imbued with Washington's ennobling
And Jefferson's democracy—
Which sees God's image in the common man.
And Franklin's wise simplicity,
He acts with Jackson's firm unbending will
And Lincoln's Christlike sympathy
Heir to the wisdom of the centuries,
And making all the best his own—
Filled with the spirit of his favored land.
Where sceptered rule was never known
He rises over Caesars, kings and lords
By grace of right and truth alone.
Lead on! The hearts of all are hungering.
For fellowship and unity;
None pray for war; men long to sheathe the sword.
And end the age long tragedy.
Lead us and guide our friends of other lands
In peace to perfect liberty.
—Martin F. Tew in the Commoner.
