ODD BITS OF NEWS FROM THE POLICE COURT

Use For The Strong Man

Chas. Lorenz, the strong arm man of the police department, reports another hazardous arrest Wednesday evening, when after a hair raising tussel, he accomplished the feat of placing Jack Hicking, of local renown, safely behind the bars of the local Bastille. Only by highly efficient work, did the experienced officer keep himself from being overpowered and finally subdued his man by falling on him as he forced him through the outer portals of the city hall. The subsequent thud almost convinced the council which was in session on the floor above that Italy had passed a donation in the form of an earthquake. Hicking appeared before Judge Kausrud yesterday morning and was sentenced to one week of board and lodging at the expense of the city.

Destructive to Glassware

Arthur Davidson came in from the woods Tuesday and at once proceeded to overstock with fiery liquid. When he reached the Club saloon he removed all obstructions in the way of glass ware from the bar and sent a bottle flying through the window. For this performance he was gently escorted to the street. One step further in his wanderings, Arthur encountered a friend and in the altercation which followed, the friend charges that Arthur beat him over the head with a stick. Deciding that the modern Arthur was a poor imitator of his namesake of the "round table", Night Officer Englickie rushed him to the dungeon. Arthur worked out half the $20 assessment made against his exchequer by Judge Kausrud the following morning.

Claims Prejudice

One of the most distinguished visitors entertained by the night policemen in several months is H. C. Freeman, arrested Saturday night charged with being intoxicated. He entered a plea of not guilty at his hearing Monday morning and will stand trial at the session next Monday morning. He attributes his arrest to prejudice against the Coach element. Freeman appeared in Bandon two or three months ago, claiming to have been sent here as a feature writer to cover the Coach-Treadgold affair. Correspondence with the Oregonian, which he claimed to represent did not confirm his statements.

PAULINE JOSEPH

That dainty Soprano, appears at the Grand Saturday and Sunday night. An exceptional attraction is Pauline Joseph, who has a good voice and sings the latest popular songs as follows: "Adam Never Had a Mammy", "Never Took a Lesson in His 'I Can't Forget'", a splendid song you will like, "Dixie Land" and the song that is sung on European battlefields—"It's a Long Way to Tipperary". Miss Joseph also does some lighting changes of costume, appearing in four complete changes of gowns each in ten seconds or less. The Marshfield people were so well pleased with this act that Miss Joseph has been booked for a return engagement. Don't fail to see her at the Grand Saturday and Sunday nights. ## A POWERFUL AND EFFICIENT MACHINE

Dredge Seattle is Strongly Built and Economical in Operations

Roy Miller, engineer for the Puget Sound Bridge and Dredging Co., who has charge of the dredging operations at present at work in Coos Bay, was in Bandon Wednesday.

He was interviewing the commissioners of the Port relative to a contract to remove five shoals from the Coquille river; one at the Moore mill, one at Randolph, one between Randolph and Parkersburg near O'Field creek; one just above Parkersburg; and the other the Strang shoal near Elk creek.

The commissioners will hold a meeting Saturday in Coquille to consider the matter, if it is agreeable to the Coquille members of the port.

Mr. Miller is prepared to make a very good offer to the commission for this work both as to price and financial arrangements. Mr. Miller's company will accept the port's note for part payment which will lessen the task of financing.

The Puget Sound Bridge and Dredging company will be through on Coos Bay at the time the Bandon port desires to begin operations. They are in a situation to do the small amount of work required at Bandon much more cheaply than any other concern.

The cost will not be great to move the dredging plant from Coos Bay to the Coquille river. But for such a small job the expense of moving a dredging plant from a distance would be prohibitive. The price asked to bring the dredge Portland from Portland to Bandon was $2,500 which did not include scows, pipe, line and other equipment. This is the dredge the commission inspected with a view of purchase.

The owners of the dredge Seattle now operating at Coos Bay desire to have their dredge stationed continually in Oregon waters as the expense of moving such an outfit is great. They are prepared to offer service at prices that will enable them to keep the dredge so employed.

The dredge Seattle was practically new at the commencement of the Coos Bay work. It is one of the most modern machines of her type and probably the most powerful on the Pacific coast for her size. The main pump is twenty inches in diameter and is driven by a one thousand horse power engine of angle compound type especially designed by the company for this dredge. At Coos Bay the longest pipe line was a mile long but the dredge can pump twice as far. Crude oil is used as fuel.

The hull of the dredge is twenty-five inches thick, built of wood and copper sheathed.

The dredge works twenty-four hours daily and seven days a week. It employs three shifts of men, so placed that each man has one day a week off. The 8-hour day with one day a week off is in compliance with the state law. The 24-hour shift is necessary for an economical operation on account of the large amount of capital invested in such an outfit.

Government dredges of the same type work only 8 hours per day for a five and one half to six day week. The Puget Sound company purchases all supplies possible at the point where they are working pursuant to local machine shops and employ local labor.

This company has done more dredging on the Pacific coast north of California than all other dredging dredging companies combined. It has done practically all the dredging handled by the U. S. Army engineers on Puget sound and also all that done by the Seattle Port commission.

At the present time this company has three large dredges at work in British Columbia, another dredge, similar to the Seattle, at work for the government on Oak Bay, Puget Sound and one large and one small dredge at work in Seattle.

In addition to dredging work this company is erecting the combined King county court house and Seattle city hall, costing one and one fourth million dollars.

MARSHFIELD COUNTERFEITERS

Two of Them are Taken By Federal Officers and are Now in Custody

Marshfield is experiencing the sensation of an exposure of counterfeiters. J. S. Stevens of the Parisian Dye Works, and Z. G. Harshman of that city, were arrested Sunday and brought to the jail manacled and were immediately placed behind the bars. Forty or fifty moulds and a small amount of coin was taken in the raid.

Harshman furnished the home for the business and where himself and associate did the work. Stevens did his regular business in another place and was accustomed to steal away quietly and assist his confederate with the work. Until four week ago Harshman had been working as an employee in a lumber mill and as a logger in the woods. While in the woods he was struck by a falling tree and has an indentation in his skull as a mark of the accident.

A controversy has already arisen over the distribution of the reward for the exposure of the criminals. At first the police were inclined to claim all the credit. But now F. O. Green comes forward with the claim that he made the discovery and is entitled to the reward. He is the owner of the building in which Harshman lived. He became suspicious of the man's employment and informed the police.

Chief Carter of the city police force watched his chance and when the men were away from home he slipped into the house and secured a mould which he sent to the government officer at Portland. The latter then came down and made the arrest.

The government officer says this is one of the neatest outfits he ever unearthed. He says he captured eleven counterfeiters within the past month. One gang in Idaho was composed of five men who operated a moonshine whisky still in connection with their efforts to put more money into circulation. It was to abolish the still that the raid was made and the counterfeiting operations was an unexpected find.
