We have heard many people thoroughly imbued with honest patriotism, criticize the American government's action on the Panama toll attitude saying that American ships should be favored. At the outset the canal represents a business investment by the government of three hundred and seventy five million dollars. If the shipping were thus favored, would the American people be greatly benefited? We think not. Only the shipping interest. If such discriminations were thus made, would the American merchant or farmer be benefited? We do not believe so. Would the doctor, banker or other business interests in the United States be benefited? We can not figure how they would be. We do see why one class of private business interests in the nation should be thus franchised or other classes of business discriminate against for the benefit of the shipping interests alone. Free tolls for American ships would merely be on way of subsidizing the shipping interest action taken.
