We Must Wash

We may live without poetry, music and art;
We may live without conscience, may love without heart;
We may live, without lovers live, without hope;
But civilized women, cannot live without soap.
We may live without looks, what is knowledge, but sorrow;
We may live without beauty, it fades on the morrow;
We may live without law suits, indictments are quashing;
But, where is the one who can live without washing

HEROIC VETERANS

Napoleon's Famous Fighters, the Imperial Guard.

LIVED UP TO THEIR MOTTO.

Even at Waterloo the Survivors of the Old Guard Fought Their Way on Their Retreat and None Surrendered. Their Shameful and Pathetic End.

Probably no household troops or bodyguards in the world ever achieved the reputation of Napoleon's imperial guard, and they had their origin in a manner that shows that imperial guards, like inventions, generally are often mothered by necessity.

It was during his Milan campaign, in the days of the republic, while Napoleon was still General Bonaparte, that the Austrians nearly captured the Little Corporal. If they had succeeded probably the whole history of Europe would have been different and Waterloo would be still waiting for a reputation.

He was posted along the bank of a river with a small escort lent from the divisions of Angereau and Massena. An Austrian corps was hustling up the banks of the same stream to join Bonaparte. After General Bonaparte had ridden some distance in company with Angereau he then returned to Valengeth, where he stopped. He had been suffering from headache and believed that a hot bath would effect a cure.

So during his stop he pulled off his boots and sought to bathe his feet at a house in the village. While he was thus engaged the Austrians appeared. They came so rapidly that there was scarcely time to sound an alarm. However, the alarm was sounded, the gates of the village were closed, and the post held out for some time.

While one foot on one leg and fearing to spend the time to boot the other, Bonaparte rushed out through a back way and thus made his escape on his horse. He rushed as hard as his horse would carry him to Messina, and, although his troops were at mess, they were quickly gathered and started off after the Austrians, who, when they were met, were forced to flee.

But the experience taught Napoleon a lesson. He found that it was perfectly possible for a commanding officer to be taken prisoner with comparative ease, and he soon found a way to make this more difficult.

He organized a command, at first called guides, whose principal duty was to protect the commanding officer. By degrees this body was increased, and under the consulate it was known as the Garde Consulaire, receiving that title in 1799. At that time it consisted of 9775 men and was a mere body of household troops, although naturally with a man like Napoleon it was a combatant force and not for ornamental purposes.

In 1804, with the creation of the empire, this body became the Imperial Guard. It grew in size and importance, and in 1809 it was divided into the Vieille garde and the Jeune garde. It was a place of honor. To be admitted the soldier must have served in three campaigns. Consequently it was known as the elite of the imperial troops. Every man was a veteran. It could be depended upon to do its utmost. In 1814, when Napoleon abdicated for the first time, the Imperial Guard had been increased to 112,482 men of all branches of service.

It was owing to the fact that this elite, called the Imperial Guard, was composed of veteran men who had seen service and were old campaigners. That Napoleon believed them to be invulnerable. The loss of battle at Waterloo led to the loss of the Imperial Guard. They heroically made it back to the sea, but they were not of the guard returned from the slaughter and at Waterloo their ranks were cut down until few of the old guard remained. It was their motto that the old guard never surrenders, and those who were able to walk away from the battlefield at the foot of Mont St. Jean fought their way on their retreat, and none surrendered.

After Waterloo the old guard was treated shamefully. As many as could be caught were court martialed, and the remainder were regarded as so many banditti. General Lallemand brought 200 of them to America and with them founded a colony in Texas, then not United States territory. This settlement, which was unsuccessful, was named Champ d'Asile, or Field of Refuge. The Mexican government compelled them to leave, and they next sought refuge at Galveston, but again were made to move on, and finally, after a few months, the 47 of the 200 that survived arrived in New Orleans. They came here in 1818, and it was not until 1820, when there were only a few survivors, that a sum of $0,000 francs reached the exiles' assistance.

Butler and Bishop.

A former bishop of Bath and Wells loved to impress on his education candidates the importance of a thorough study of the "Annals" of Bishop Butler. "Goodly, my dear young friend," he once said in taking leave of a student at the palace door and then earnestly added, "Whatever you do, don't forget the Butler." "Oh, my lord, I haven't," stammered on the youth. "I have just given the hat a crown."—T P's London Weekly

Agnaid and Hanganal.

Hanganal was anxiously spotted as well, but did not mean the lot of article hanging from a nail, but a corn on the toe or any hard swelling. Palatine writes that "Agnaid" from one's toes" advising that they were not to be mistaken for the spotted one of the mouth.
