

DOUGH AND DYNAMITE

Keystone Special (Two Reels) Featuring Charles Chaplin and Chester Conklin

The bakers in the employ of Monsieur La Vie go on strike. In the emergency Pierre and Jacques, the waiters, take possession of the kitchen and as there is quite a bit of jealousy between them an account of the female waitresses who smile impartially on both, it is not long before the dough is flying. Meanwhile the strikers have conspired. They drill a hole in a loaf of bread and insert therein a stick of dynamite, cleverly replacing the piece of crust on the end of the loaf. Then they give it to a little girl, instructing her to carry it to the bakery and explaining that because the bread is too heavy her mother has sent it back. The wife of Monsieur La Vie returns the child's money, and orders are given to the bakers to put the loaf back in the oven and bake it some more. They comply. The whole establishment is in a demoralized state. Customers in the cafe can not get waited upon. The cook is in a towering temper. Pierce is clubbed on the head by the strikers, and goes about in a maudlin condition, getting himself and everybody else into all sorts of trouble. And then—the dynamited loaf explodes! The innocent victims are buried in splintered ovens, broken china, an earthquake of pastry and bursting flour sacks—and huge mounds of dough heave fitfully where human hearts once throbbed. At the very end of the tragedy we see the yeast mass churning and swelling—and then, out of the sticky lump the unfortunate Pierce thrusts a glum head. See it at the Grand Theatre Wednesday, September 22.

M. G. Pohl at School

San Diego, Cal., Sept. 10, 1915 Editor Bandon Recorder:

Just to occupy my time I am sending you a short description of a most pleasant and highly instructive visit paid last Sunday evening to the Theosophical Educational meeting. Judge for yourself whether my time was well spent.

After a violin concert given by the ladies of the Raja Vojia University, all dressed in ancient Greek costumes and adorned with garlands and flowers and seated amid grand garden scenery, ear and eye received an inspiring treat.

Then followed a mixed chorus of ladies and gents, all students.

This finished the exercises and examination of children from 2 to 8 years of age, followed. To see those little fellows move up on the platform, so filled with confidence, to notice their pleasure and courage, facing an over-filled house, bowing here and there, throwing a hand kiss to some distant friend or relative, is easier to be seen than described. A lady, sitting before the piano, played a soft introduction, followed by a song accompanied by the young singers.

Then a large blackboard was stationed on the platform and the examination of the children by the teachers was conducted. The subject was spelling and not a word was misspelled.

Next a large map of the two hemispheres was placed over the blackboard and before it on a small table were the flags of all nations. As the teacher took up a flag, showing them in rotation each child would call the name of such nation, one after the other following with equal results.

Further examination in geography proved still more interesting. One after the other of the children would take a station before the map, showing with a stick the sections of the globe the teacher called for. Not only this but the children would give the names of the capitals, the names of rivers, mountains, seas and other information relative to such localities, whether it was in Asia, Australia or any other continent or any ocean.

This finished, botany followed. The children even explained the means of diffusion of plant life.

The examination in arithmetic was perfectly astonishing. Children asked by the teacher in English, French or German would give the names of the number in the language as asked.

The most difficult examples were solved by a seven year old boy. One a question involving quantities of different merchandise, their weights and prices given per pound, with fractions of weight and price was read to him. Then from memory he would make the calculation on the blackboard faster than most grown people could follow. Other solved problems in algebra, many calculated by mental thought.

Not less interesting was their musical training. The child would be placed with its back to the piano, the instructor would strike a key and by the sound the child would give the name of the tone, it would give the relation of the tone to color and such study would again be used in the composing and painting of ornaments and clothing. At the end of the examination I sincerely that such methods would soon become universal for only this instruction is the way to influence the character of the child and mould it to develop a higher grade of humanity.

Mme. Katherine Thingly, the founder and principal of this institute and university, then spoke to the audience and gave an extremely interesting lecture. The university and institute is located at Point Loma, a short distance from San Diego. Between seven and eight thousand tourists and visitors have called there this summer and among them, many noted people from all parts of the earth.

Respectfully,
M. G. POHL
