In this newspaper article, the focus is on the preparations for the 11th Annual Oregon School Teachers' Association Meeting held in Bandon, Oregon. The text discusses various aspects of the meeting, including registration, school-related topics, and economic considerations. The article highlights the importance of public education and the role of teachers in shaping the future of the community. It also touches on the challenges faced by educators, such as the need for adequate funding and resources.

Key points:
- The meeting is significant for teachers and educators, serving as a platform for discussion and professional development.
- The registration fee of $5.00 per thousand, as mentioned in the article, indicates the cost consideration for attendees.
- There is a discussion about the economic impact of the meeting on the local community, with an estimate of approximately $1,000.
- The article stresses the importance of public education, with statements like, "We are educators, not promoters" and "This is a meeting for teachers, by teachers, about teachers."