ONE BY ONE, THE ROSES FALL

Republican papers have made the most of the espousal of Blaine and his gang by the Irish World. No body paid any serious attention to all this, for the reason that no one expected that paper to support the Democratic ticket, besides, owing to the extraordinary tone of the sheet, its support was not particularly desirable. But when it was iterated and reiterated that O'Donovan Rossa was for the tattooed man, Democrats wondered if this indeed could be so? Below we let the great agitator speak for himself in this behalf. In his paper, the United Irishman, O'Donovan says:

"All the Irish are going for the Republican party! So say the Irish papers that are bought up. We make bold to tell the Republican party the big mistake they make in supposing that because they purchase a few newspapers they purchase the Irish vote. The Democrats are becoming united on the Presidential candidate, and it is very likely the Democrats will win this time. The country seems to be tired of the rule of the Republican party. During its twenty-four years of administration the character of the nation at home and abroad has fallen so low that the name of 'American citizen' is a thing spoken of only with contempt.

We have seen this Republican Administration give England permission to arrest Irishmen in the city of New York and hold them in prison there because England "suspected" those Irishmen had committed some political offence in Ireland. We have seen the Republican Administration in Washington grant warrants for the arrest of P. J. Sheridan in New York because England "suspected" that he was connected with the killing of two of the English Governors in Ireland. We have seen the Republican Administration in Washington give the New York postoffice into the hands of English spies, that those spies may have the run of letters passing through the post. We see England doing every thing she likes to do with this Republican Administration of ours, and naturally and instinctively we find ourselves in the humor to arrest England's march through the channel of the Nation's life.

We have a lively recollection of every administration of the Republican party during the last six terms, and from the first term to the last term—from the day Gen. Michael Corcoran was court-martialed for refusing to parade his regiment through the streets of New York in honor of England's Prince of Wales to the day the present President honored the Queen of England by presiding at the opening of Brooklyn Bridge on her birthday—we have seen nothing but toadying to England and Englishmen. That salutation to the English flag at Yorktown looked like an invitation to England to lay her wires to take charge of the country again; it was an insult to the memory of our martyred dead; and for no other cause but because of that insult and outrage, no American with Irish blood or any other manly blood in his veins should vote for keeping in power a party who thus outrage the sacred memory of those who fought and fell for the freedom we enjoy.

One can scarcely find a Republican who will seriously deny that Blaine has always been a corruptionist and that the evidence that he prostituted his position as Speaker of the House for private gain. This is a sorry commentary on the tendency of the times sure.

A TRUTHFUL PICTURE.

The Chicago Times (Independent), seriously discourses as below, concerning the manner of men who are attracted to the enthusiastic support of Mr. Blaine, and the intelligent reader must pause and ask himself why it is thus? The Times says:

"Among the Republicans who are opposed to Mr. Blaine are none of the 'pot hunters' of the party. They are leading business men, prominent lawyers, clergymen, college professors, distinguished writers, and careful students of history and the science of government. Some of these deserters from the Republican party are the ornaments of the intellectual life of the nation. Among them is not one notorious corruptionist, not one whose name is associated in the public mind with questionable transactions; not one who has ever been suspected of complicity in schemes of plunder and jobbery. But the surviving members of the whisky ring are zealous in their championship of the magnetic man. The star-route contractors are, without exception, 'booming' for him. The land grabbers and subsidy sharks, the contractors and lobbyists, and in fact the entire scurvy gang of jobbers and robbers who held high carnival during his incumbency of the Speakership, are among his warmest admirers, and are leaving nothing undone to promote his success. If nothing else were known to the discredit of Mr. Blaine, the fact that after twenty years in Congress he is surrounded by this motley array of mercenary adventurers would be sufficient to render him a legitimate object of suspicion. Dorsey and Robeson, and Spencer and Kellogg, and Keifer and Jay Hubbel, and 'Steve' Elkins and Clayton, and Brady and Delano, and 'Dick' Herrington and the rest are for Blaine. They take great pride in his 'brilliant' and 'nerve, and 'audacity,' and should he be elected to the Presidency they will look into the future with cheerful confidence.

With Governor Cleveland the case is very different. He has been in public life a comparatively short time, but he has succeeded in gaining the active enmity of every 'crooked' politician in the country. The jobbers who find in Blaine their ideal statesman regard Cleveland with unconcealed detestation and scorn. They neglect no opportunity to avow their conviction that he is unfit to be President, and that his election would be a national calamity. There must be some reason for all this, and a good one. Why does Mr. Blaine inspire the confidence of the jobbers, and why does Cleveland excite their aversion? This is a question which honest men, whose only concern is for pure government, ought to ask themselves."

"BONE-HUNTERS."

A circular, signed by A. E. Ford as chairman of "Committee of arrangements," was recently issued in Brooklyn, New York, purporting to represent the "Irish-American Independents," and sent out inviting various Irishmen to be present at an "Independent" Irish banquet. One of the circulars was sent to Mr. Luke O'Reilly, Jr., of No. 89 Broadway, Brooklyn, who wrote the following on a postal card and returned it to Mr. Ford:

"I am not in sympathy with your so-called Irish-American independent movement—first, because you are a gang of bone-hunters, strikers and political tramps attempting to trade on the innocence of a misrepresented people for the purpose of obtaining a little of the Republican soap; second, because I sprang from a race that owes its allegiance to the Democratic party, and third, because the protection to American labor and American citizenship can be secured only through the supremacy of Grover Cleveland over Mulligan-Blaine.

The [Republican] telegraph is doing its level best for Blaine. It describes his western trip down to the minutest detail, not even omitting to mention the exact hour of his breakfasting here and there, and whether in his room or the dining hall. The telegraph was subsidized a year in advance to boom Blaine, and is carrying its part of the contract to the letter, in fact, without the telegraph he had had no boom.

While probably nobody believes the stupid falsehood that "God save the Queen" was played at the National Democratic Convention, everybody knows that the British colors were saluted at our Yorktown Centennial by order of James G. Blaine, who, by virtue of then being Secretary of State, was chief manager of the exercises of the occasion. These Blaine fagmen must credit the Irish with extremely short memories.
