Bandon High to Join the Debating League

Will Determine This Year Whether Uncle Sam Should Adopt Swiss Military Service System.

Bandon High school, which last year won the Southwestern Oregon debating championship honors and gave the north Oregon "champs" a run for their money, has been invited to join the state debating league again this year. The matter is under consideration and the High school will probably send in its acceptance in a few days.

Schools that intend entering the Oregon High School Debating league this year have been requested by the state university authorities, under the auspices of which institutions the meets will be held, to send in their notice of acceptance immediately, October 15 being the closing date for enrollment. Earl Kilpatrick, University of Oregon, is secretary. The state debating cup, known as the University of Oregon cup, is now held by Salem, which beat Enterprise in last spring's finals. The year before Pendleton held it.

Last year's league had 41 high schools, and Secretary Kilpatrick thinks this year's will have 60. Much thought was given to selection of this year's subject. A topic that was timely, that was of general interest, and that was not beyond the range of high school pupils was sought, some previous subjects having been distinctly college grade.

The Question for Debate

The committee in charge of the selection finally decided upon the following:

"Resolved, That the United States should adopt the essential features of the Swiss system of military service and training."

The state is divided into eight districts for league purposes: Coos Bay, Southern Oregon, Northern Willamette, Southern Willamette, Upper Columbia, Eastern Oregon, Lower Columbia and Umatilla. Up to the time of writing, Marshfield is the only high school in the Coos Bay district that has accepted, but it is surmised the others will have done so before the closing date.

University Notes

The usual first day hazing stunts were enacted in detail this year, the Freshmen being the victims. The Sophomores gathered all the wearers of the green caps they could find, and compelling them to turn their coats wrong side out, and roll up their trouser legs, marched them through the business section of Eugene. The chesty Sophs, who underwent the same ordeal last year, marshalled their forces and at the points of guns compelled the members of the baby class to do the lock step and other thing, ad ridiculum. Down town, each Freshman was compelled to tell where he came from and to give the yell of his high school.

The registration in arts and science at the University this year is 775, which, despite the strained finances of hundreds who would like to attend college, is an increase of 50 over the corresponding registration of last year. The total enrollment will approximate 2000.

The necessity of practical education along the lines of building up Oregon's commercial relations is being recognized by the university students. The oldtime student in the classical college usually picked out law, medicine, the ministry, or the teaching professions. The 1915 student is more likely to be taking cost accounting, domestic commerce, business law, business organization and management, municipal administration, public utility accounting, resources of the northwest, and similar studies that help to fit constructive business in Oregon.

No fraternity houses, either men's or women's may this year hold more than two dances on its premises or elsewhere under its direction, says a new regulation passed by the faculty of the state university. Holidays are excepted. The fraternity that breaks this rule is to lose its next two dances. If it breaks the rule a second time, it is to lose the next three dances. A third violation renders participants subject to suspension. Responsibility for enforcement is put upon the dean of men and the dean of women.

A bulletin from Corvallis is to the effect the opening enrollment at the Oregon Agricultural college this year was 1133. This number it is expected will be increased to 1600 before the end of the term.

"Smiling Dutch," manager of Jim Wilson, was in the city last week trying to make arrangements for a wrestling match for the boy wonder during the Carnival week. Wilson, who is but eighteen years of age, will put up a side bet of $100 to take on any two men and throw them within an hour, or will give a like amount to the man who will stay with him on the mat for twenty minutes.—North Bend Tide.

Romance Versus Matter of Fact

By OSCAR COX

There is a little Indian girl up on Hudson bay who has never been out of her native woods. She speaks poetically, as all aborigines do. Her vocabulary is small, but she makes up for the deficiency of words in imagery. One summer Miss Susan Jones, a matter of fact young woman as ever trod the soil, took it into her head to spend her vacation in upper Canada. These two met in the Indian girl's home on the banks of the Little Whale river. Miss Jones said she had heard much of Indian legends and asked— I didn't get the girl's name; Miss Jones said it was Minne-Something-or-Other—to tell her one. Thereupon the Indian told the following story:

"Abasca was the daughter of a great chief, who lived long, long ago when the first white man came to this country. She had never seen any man except a—"

"Indian," suggested Miss Jones. "She had only seen the dusky men of the forest like herself. The first man to come was tall as the young pine, straight as the arrow and his eye was that of the eagle. Abasca saw him, and her heart flew to him like the bird."

"A case of love at first sight, you mean?" "Abasca was loved by Stormwind, the son of a chief. Stormwind was brave as the water that leaps from the rock, and his arrow could pierce the leaf that trembles at the top of the tree—"

"A regular William Tell," Miss Jones interrupted.

"He had not the heart to give way to another. He was not born to know that to love Abasca truly he should give her to the man she loved. The white man might do that, not the Indian. Stormwind learned that she had given her heart to the white man, and he resolved that the white man should die."

"Stormwind made this vow at the season when in this country the lamp never goes out at night."

"Did they use kerosene or oil?" "For the winter had passed when the sun at midday is small and cold in the south. The white man was in the wood where he hunted the fox and the mink and the otter. Stormwind followed the trail and came to his enemy when the sun stood high above their heads."

"Trapper," said Stormwind. "What a funny name! I like Storm wind much better."

"The white man may come; the white man may hunt the fox and the mink and the otter; he may ride in his boat over the waves of the great bay, but he shall not take the maiden from the Indian."

"When he said this Stormwind fitted an arrow to his bow. It may be he had never seen the white man's rifle; it may be he had never seen the white man raise the rifle quickly to his shoulder and the deer far away drop dead. Before he had fitted his arrow to his bow and pointed it at his enemy the white man's eye ran along the barrel of his weapon."

"Trapper had the drop on him, hadn't he? How thrilling! Go on!"

"Stormwind," he said, "put back your arrow into your quiver before I send the lead into your heart. Abasca is yours. I do not wed here in the forest. The white man loves the white woman, not the Indian squaw!"

"From the woods came a piercing shriek. The white man lowered his rifle and the red man his bow. It was a woman's voice they heard. From a cliff near by it came again, fainter, but more despairing than before. It was the echo."

"For heaven's sake, what was it? A spook?"

"It was the wail of Abasca. She had seen Stormwind go away with the look of an angry Manitou on his brow, and she knew that he was going to fight the man she loved. Seizing a rifle from the tepee, she followed her dusky lover and saw him when he spoke to—"

"Trapper." "She held her rifle to her shoulder ready when Stormwind was about to send his arrow to his rival's heart or when the white man raised his rifle to kill the man she did not love." "She must have been awfully rattled."

"When she heard the white man say he did not love her she dropped her rifle, giving a cry that caused the white cloud sailing in the heavens above to tremble."

"I wonder she hadn't shot the brute." "Then the white man and the Indian went in the direction from whence the sound came and saw on a high rock the form of Abasca. She was on the edge of a deep gulf beneath her, swaying here and there as the branch is moved by the wind. Then slowly her head bowed over the chasm, and as the bird folds its wings and drops her beautiful form descended to death."

"You wouldn't catch me doing that for the handsomest man that ever lived. What did the men do then?" "The white man went back to the white man's country; the Indian went out on the bay, and the storm wind, for which he was named, arose and calmed him."

"I'll bet that man Trapper was paying alimony to some woman in the states. He was just mean enough to fool that poor Indian girl."

The Diamond From the Sky

Chapter Six The $10,000 Prize Story "Shadows at Sunrise"

Fairfax had hardly swung back to an old time tournament at ye Fairfax grounds next Saturday afternoon. All riders must be masked. Ye victorious knight shall crown his lady fair a squire of love and beauty."

Arthur stirred with a sudden resolve! He would take a chance for Esther's sake. Farmer Smith, readily consented to loan him Starlight, his blooded Kentucky mount, for the occasion. And Farmer Smith's wife saw to it that the mask he required was in his possession as, mounted on the prancing thoroughbred, he started off in the direction of Fairfax. Tears welled in the eyes of the youth as he approached Stanley Hall for all hopes lay inside those four walls. Arthur knew that Hagar and Esther were making it their abode. He was pleased. Quietly, he scribbled a few lines on a piece of paper and stealing across the lawn to the window looking into Esther's room, tossed it through the opening.

Esther came to the great tree near the stile, where Arthur asked her to meet him and beseeched him to give up his mad resolve. But he was firm. Fairfax, as always, was represented at the tournament by every one of any prominence. But this afternoon, all eyes were centered on the well built youth, evidently a stranger, mounted on the beautiful Kentucky thoroughbred. Only two in the vast throng recognized his disguise—Esther and Blair Stanley.

A great cheer went up as Blair, on his mount, swerved to frustrate the rush of horsemen in his direction. A moment later, Arthur's mount crashed into him, unseating Blair. Humiliated in the presence of Vivian, Blair planned immediate revenge. As Arthur, winner of the tournament, was about to place the crown on the head of the radiant Esther, Blair pointed out Arthur to Sheriff Swain. "There's your man, Athur Stanley, murderer of Dr. Lee." It was Quabba who rushed to Arthur and warned him. In a moment Arthur was on his mount, flight his only thought. Fighting, struggling, the gypsy lad, surrounded by a cordon of mounted men, was being slowly driven into a corner near the grandstand. His very life, his liberty, he realized depended upon his escape!
