Believed Satisfactory Land Grant Settlement Can Now Be Reached

Governor Withycombe has called a conference for Thursday, November 18 of the seven state commissioners and the Southern Pacific officials to formulate some plan for the settlement of the Oregon-California land grant controversy.

According to resolutions adopted at the Land Grant Conference held in Salem, September 16-17, there was a general desire to reach an agreement between the state government and the corporation, to put an end to litigation and open the lands to settlement on fair terms.

So far as the members of the commission have expressed themselves through the press, there seems to be a unanimous agreement that under no circumstances shall any of the 2,300,000 acres be added to the forest reserve.

There is also a unanimous desire that the railroad company be required to pay up all back taxes for several years amounting to $2,000,000, and now due the eighteen counties in which the Land Grant is located.

The states and counties are equally interested in keeping this property, valued at about $40,000,000, upon the tax rolls as a big asset of revenue for the future.

It is variously estimated that there are possibly 400,000 acres of this land suitable for homes, and on which bonafide settlers could locate and make a living.

Some of the commissioners are very anxious that the State Land board should handle such lands as might be opened to settlement in such a way as to do justice to the railroad company and at the same time add several million dollars to the irreducible school fund.

It is believed that after several preliminary conferences a final agreement can be reached on some of these lines and put an end to a controversy that for the past eight years has held up the development of the state.

Farm and Dairy Information

FARM ACCOUNTS

The average farmer dislikes book-keeping. Ask any farmer you know, as for instance, yourself, what it costs to produce a bushel of corn, a pound of pork or a gallon of milk. Occasionally a smart man has done original figuring, but most of them are content to guess. The business man who guesses will nearly always guess wrong, and this is to invite disaster.

Because farmers generally know nothing about the cost of production they have fallen into the habit of letting the buyer set a price on their products.

To make a beginning one may set down on the left-hand page of a little blank book the items of cash taken in and on the right-hand page similar entries of expenditure. This is the "cash book"—the beginning of exact knowledge as a substitute for guessing. If one gets this far perhaps he will grow enthusiastic and open up a ledger. This book is merely a compilation of items taken from the cash book with such other entries as may be desired, except that ledger accounts are arranged under heads or clauses, while the cash book is written up by dates.

The farmers of this land need to establish closer relations between producer and consumer; they need co-operation; they need to cut out useless middlemen; they need to strive for bigger yields per acre and to keep up the fertility of their soils, but first of all, and as a foundation for all these betterments, they need to know what farm products cost.

No other producer would consent to remain ignorant of the fundamentals of his occupation. The merchant or manufacturer would go broke without his precise cost system. About the most important thing for the farmer of the future to do is to become a business man, and farm accounts are indispensable to the business farmer.

COW TESTING ASSOCIATIONS

One hundred and sixty-three cooperative cow-testing associations were in operation last year in the United States. This is considered to be a rapid growth when it is remembered that the first association in this country was organized in Fremont, Mich., in 1905, and that as late as 1908 only six associations had been formed. The next year, however, the number rose to 25, and it has been increasing rapidly ever since. America is, nevertheless, in this respect still far behind Europe, where there are at the present time between 2,500 and 3,000 such associations, the first having been started in Denmark in 1895.

The principle of which these associations work is both extremely simple and yet important. Year after year farmers milk cows that do not pay for the feed they consume. Indeed, the average annual production of a cow in this country is approximately 4,000 pounds of milk, containing 150 pounds of butter fat. The best dairymen say there is no profit in such production, and of course there are vast numbers of cows that fall far below these figures. To make his herd a success, therefore, the farmer must weed out the animals that are costing him money and keep those that are bringing it in to him.

Guessing Doesn't Pay

This, however, is not so easy as it may seem. Experiments continually show that it is impossible for any man, however experienced he may be to estimate with any accuracy the yearly production of milk from any cow. Some animals start with a very good production and then drop to a very ordinary flow, while others give a much more regular yield. The latter may at the end of the year have given the farmer much more milk, but he will probably consider the former to be the profitable ones. As a matter of fact, a man can not guess within a quart how much milk there is in a pail, and if he is selling the product of his herd on a butter fat basis, he knows even less of the yield from each individual animal.

Excellent butter may be made in a small ice cream freezer, but care should be taken that there is not a particle of rust in the can and it should be polished till it shines.

Where hay is high priced it doesn't pay to buy hay to feed any but high-grade dairy cows. The farmer whose herd is bigger than his hay crop seldom can afford to keep low-grade animals.

Let the horse have a chance to roll as often as possible; it will rest and refresh him. Give him a little clean earth or a piece of sod to eat now and then; he craves it, and it is good for his stomach and blood.

LUMBER IMPROVING IN THE NORTHWEST

OREGONIAN ARTICLE CORROBORATES REVIEW IN LAST WEEK'S WORLD.

Dealers Are Not Too Optimistic, But Note Situation is Much Brighter—Mills Are Shipping Surplus Material to East and Middle West, and Will Resume Operations.

Corroborative to Western World's review of the lumber situation in last week's issue the Oregonian has since published the following:

Lumber business in Portland and vicinity is beginning to improve. In fact it has been improving for the last few weeks. Lumbermen, bankers and railroad officials, who are accustomed to deal with lumber, anticipate a steady and continued improvement until the trade reaches its normal basis. They don't look for a boom until after the war, and are not certain about a boom even then.

The increased demand for lumber is due principally to retail orders in the Middle West. No decided improvement has been noticed in the local or in the California demands.

The export movement on account of the war is far below normal.

But in spite of the adverse conditions locally and in the foreign trade the lumber men are experiencing a pronounced improvement in their business on account of Eastern demands for their products.

Logging operators, who have not been able to move their logs for more than a year, in the last few weeks have found themselves confronted with orders from mills and manufacturers.

Mills that have been idle or running on part time now are beginning to ship some of their surplus material and are getting ready to increase their working forces if the market activity continues.

It is improbable, however, that logging camps will find it necessary to operate through the winter. It is the custom even in normal times, to suspend activity through the winter months and supply the trade from their surplus. They do not expect the demand to become so great as to exhaust their surplus before Spring.

The activity among the logging plants has been reflected in the banks of Portland, where the bulk of the lumber business of the Northwest is financed.

"Within the last six weeks," said a cashier of a big Portland bank the other day, "we have been called on to handle a large volume of logging paper. Previous to that time we didn't see any logging paper for months and months. It shows that the mills need more logs."

"We have noticed for quite a while that the mills are shipping more lumber to their Eastern and Middle Western customers. The business has increased substantially within the last six weeks."

Portland lumbermen are not inclined to be too optimistic, however, over the apparent improvement in their business. The lumber industry has been stagnant so long and has been treated with false hopes of revival so often that they are not to be led into exultations over even such a substantial improvement as the present one seems to be.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC WONT RELINQUISH EQUITY IN UNSOLD O. & C. LANDS

Annual Report of Road Chairman of Directors Says Line Will Cooperate With Congress.

According to the Southern Pacific Company's annual report, just issued, it will insist that the full value conferred by the granting acts in relation to the unsold Oregon & California railroad grant lands shall be secured to the company. The exact language used by Julius Kruttschnitt, chairman of the board of directors, in his report is: "The railroad company will be prepared to co-operate with congress in securing appropriate modifications of the original restrictions on the sales of the lands, but it will insist upon observance of the conditions that the full value conferred by the granting acts is secured to it."

The qualifying clause in capital letters and in part follows the expression used by the supreme court of the United States in its decision in the land grant case. Chairman Kruttschnitt's report reiterates the position of the Southern Pacific company stated by its attorney at the recent meeting of county delegates at Salem when he contended that under the court's decision the company still held title to the timber, the mineral and other natural wealth on the unsold land, in which the company's equity is $2.50 an acre.
