CIRCUIT COURT.

Two More Men Receive Their Sentence.

Hugh Medlock's future for the next three and a half years was decided by Judge Fee yesterday, when he passed sentence upon the convicted man. James Smith who stole a watch from Henry Fanning's person, was sent below for two and a half years. These men will be taken to Salem at the end of the week.

After arguments before the jury, the case was given them for a verdict, and one was handed in this afternoon, that Henry Parr was guilty as charged in the indictment. Judge Fee will pronounce sentence on Saturday morning.

The case against Henry Joseph followed the trial of Parr and concluded the attention of the court during yesterday afternoon. Joseph, it will be remembered, was one of the three men who tried to board a train at Athena during the spring and was put off the car by the officials. Not succeeding in this attempt he sought immediate revenge by stoning the car and throwing a large stick at conductor Wills. The three men were placed under arrest and locked up in the Athena jail, from which they effected their escape, only to be recaptured at Weston. Upon examination two of the party were sentenced to a short term of imprisonment and Joseph held over to the grand jury.

The grand jury made its final report Wednesday, and returned not true bills in the case of Al Backman, arrested on the charge of larceny of a gelding, and also in that against W. O. Warren, arrested for larceny of public money. Frank Morris, who was held for burglary, was likewise discharged, no indictment having been returned against him. The Lombard-Chick adultery case was brought up and continued until next term.

Hugh Robie's case has been continued to next term.

Miss Woodruff chose those who already held teachers certificates, rather than young people who had never taught, rightly believing that it is better to allow some of the present force of teachers to become more proficient than to increase the number. These young people will attend the normal next fall.

Dear Chased By a Train.
Lincoln B. Jay, on his last run to Huntington witnessed the flight of two beautiful deer down the railroad track for at least a quarter of a mile. The train was going at good speed up the grade between Gibbon and Wilbur, and about 50 feet ahead of the train ran the deer both of which were large in stature and well developed. After keeping up the race for some distance they bounded up the hill side with all their natural grace and were soon on a pinnacle overlooking both track and train.—Pendleton Tribune.

CUNNINGHAM RANCHES DESTROYED.

A Fierce Conflagration Destroys Valuable Property.

Chas. Cunningham, known as the sheep king of Umatilla county, has again been the victim of incendiarism, this being the fourth year he has suffered large losses apparently through the work of enemies, says the Tribune. Word was received early Monday morning that Cunningham's buildings had been burned and a considerable loss sustained. Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham were in Pendleton at the time and only able to obtain partial particulars. It is learned that men employed at the Beech creek ranch, awoke early Monday to find the house, barn and out buildings ablaze. Flames were arising from several different sources and so well under way that any effort to control the fire would have been futile. Barns, houses, hay, shearing sheds and other property were rapidly consumed, only one building escaped total destruction. A large amount of wool which was stored outside of the barn was discovered on fire but through the efforts of employes the flames were extinguished and the wool saved.

Soon after this had been accomplished men on the ranch were surprised by the approach of parties from Mr. Cunningham's place on Birch creek, bringing news of another misfortune of similar character. Sunday night about 11 o'clock they were awakened by fire and discovered that nearly all the buildings were burning. Nothing could be done to avert destruction and the conflagration swept on consuming a barn which contained about 1500 head of thoroughbred bucks, the best breed sheep owned on the Cunningham ranch. The men stated that they had followed the tracks of riders from Birch creek to the other farm and the belief prevails that the incendiaries visited Birch creek at midnight and repeated their atrocious crimes at daybreak upon the other property. Insurance is carried in at least three companies, amounting in all to fully $25,000.

The East Oregonian of Tuesday has the following additional particulars: Over 500 sacks of wool—240,000 pounds—are burning fiercely at Charles Cunningham's Birch creek sheep ranch, three miles beyond Pilot Rock. This great pile of wool is a seething mass of flames, which at times burst out and rise to a height of 20 feet. The wool has been burning since 3 o'clock this morning, for at that hour came the human fire fiends the second time and after applying quantities of coal oil, held a match at different places and then mounted their horses for a hasty retreat. Mr. Cunningham was sleeping in the orchard, about 100 feet away, with seven wool haulers, who were to commence this morning to haul the wool to Pendleton. They had made their bunks on the ground in the midst of the desolation of the fire of the night before. Bright flames suddenly shot up and cast their lurid light against the dark hills surrounding the ranch home site and the men sprang to their feet. They learned in an instant what was transpiring and set immediately at work to find whither had gone the scoundrels who had thus wreaked a devilish vengeance and caused such dire devastation of property. Horse tracks were discovered and trailed as far as Waugh's place, one mile down the road toward Pendleton. Here the trail was lost and the men returned to stand in helplessness and witness the conflagration at the wool warehouse.

The building was 50x200 feet and contained 240,000 pounds of wool. Built of dry lumber, the structure burned like tinder, and when the last bit of timber had been consumed, there was not left a vestige of the famous Cunningham Birch creek ranch plant, excepting that the wool was not yet turned to ashes and was but starting on its two weeks' steady burning. On the Birch creek and Butter creek ranches are now left standing not a building or thing of value, excepting one house on the latter place, saved from the fire on Monday morning.
