A SMALL BLAZE.

A Candle Ignites a Bed in a Restaurant in Athens.

At 11:30 o'clock Saturday night the hoarse clang of the fire bell roused our citizens and the fire department from their peaceful slumbers.

When the department arrived on the scene, prepared to do battle, the fire had been put out—also much of the excitement.

The fire occurred in an upstairs room of Comb's Restaurant, next door west of McKay's saloon, and was started, so it is said by a candle igniting the clothing on a bed in which two little girls were sleeping. They were awakened and their screams brought immediate assistance.

Several buckets of water, and a feather bed soon put out the flames. The fire laddies were promptly on hand. The hose team laid line of hose from the hydrant in front of Hollis's store, but no water was used on the fire.

Had the flames got any headway, it would have been hard, hot work which the boys would have been called on to do, but fortunately the flames were controlled almost instantly with but little damage done.

A Fine Store.

Max Lewin is now located in his new store room next door east of the Pioneer Drug Store. Max has splendid taste when it comes to arranging and decorating a store, and his place of business is a model of neatness and elegance. Max has lots of groceries and he sells them.

IT IS NOW JUDGE LOWELL.

James A. Fee Resigns His Position on the District Bench.

An announcement was made this forenoon which caused intense surprise and regret to the friends of Judge James A. Fee, of the circuit court of Oregon for this district says the East Oregonian. It was that he resigned his office for judge and intended to retire from the bench to enter the field again as a practitioner in the courts. Only a few of his more intimate friends had been apprised of his intentions. The report spread over the town and the news was the one topic which was discussed by everyone. Judge Fee had said, prior to the last election, that he hesitated about allowing his name again to be used as a candidate, but finally decided to run. As was expected, he was re-elected, and took the bench, supposedly for another six year's term. But, for private business reasons, he has come to the conclusion that he prefers to retire from the bench, and his written resignation was therefore made to the governor. Possessing, as he does, the implicit confidence of every citizen of Eastern Oregon who has ever come in contact with him in private or public relation, his resignation caused intense regret. His occupancy of the bench has been marked with that high sense of honor which is a perpetual warrant the judicial system will be kept pure and untainted. He retires with a record which will always be of value to him in future years.

A SUCCESSOR NOMINATED.

As soon as the announcement was made public, a delegation of attorneys called on Stephen A. Lowell and urged him to allow his name to be forwarded to Governor Lord as a candidate for appointment to succeed Judge Fee, and it soon looked like "Judge Lowell" now. The manner in which the proposal to nominate Mr. Lowell was received must certainly be gratifying to the gentleman. Every member of the bar in the city was warm in support for him for the position, and dozens of prominent citizens volunteered to sign petitions to the governor. It was not doubted that Mr. Lowell would be Judge Fee's successor.

Judge Fee's resignation was to take effect immediately. The endorsement of the entire legal profession of Pendleton and all the county officers, as well as of representative business men was wired by Judge Lowell's friends, and several dozen letters were handed in for transmission to Salem. Governor Lord acted promptly in the matter, for at 1:45 this afternoon, Judge Lowell was in receipt of a telegram from Governor Lord saying that he had been appointed and that he would forward the commission by mail. This will arrive on tomorrow or Thursday morning, and Judge Lowell will proceed to the court house to be sworn in by County Clerk Burroughs. The appointment, under Oregon law, is effected by the coming general state election, which will be nine months hence.

During the afternoon, there has been a steady stream of callers at the law office of Hailey, Lowell & Butler, and congratulations extended to Judge Lowell have come from professional and business men and people of all classes.

Judge Lowell was interviewed by the East Oregonian. The judge was in a smiling mood and gracefully accepted the compliments of the occasion. In speaking of the appointment, he said: "I do not hesitate to say that the honor conferred on me by the governor is highly appreciated. Everyone would have preferred that Judge Fee remain on the bench. He is eminently fitted for a judicial position and has honored the courts of the state by his attitude on all occasions.

"The warm support given me by members of my profession and by my other friends has given me deep pleasure. I desire to acknowledge it through your paper."

OAKESDALE'S LATEST.

Her Name Was Dennis and she's Flown to St. Paul.

There is no doubt in any one's mind but that Oakesdale, Washington, is a town that boasts of more sensations than any other in this section of the country.

Even preachers up there have been known to step aside from the righteous path of duty. It's not so long ago that pretty Cassie Helmer, who formerly resided in Weston, eloped with a young fellow up there. She found she was in the wrong boat and returned to her parents.

The very latest at Oakesdale occurred Monday when Miss Nellie Dennis left the parental roof that had sheltered her from the storms of eighteen winters, and took a Northern Pacific train for St. Paul. Her father is in pursuit.

Matt Mosgrove was in town Wednesday.

Vow to the Dead.

"If you die I will sleep by the side of your grave all the rest of my life." This remarkable vow was made fifteen years ago to his sick wife by Edwin L. Morrison, at that time chief clerk of the Pennsylvania freight department and a protégé of Ralph Peters, the superintendent of the Miami division of the Pennsylvania road. He followed his wife's body to the grave, and remained seated beside it until the sexton, moved to pity by the constancy of the man's love, allowed him to sleep in a small tool house near by. And now Edward L. Morrison, once the handsome, debonair railroad man, is old, wrinkled and haggard, but still sits in his rickety hut by the side of the tomb of the woman he loved so well. For fifteen years he has kept up this solemn vigil, yet the heart that was torn in twain by poignant grief still beats, and the old man longs for the bride of his youth as the cycles of time roll on.

Most of Them Nobles.

According to the newly-issued army list at Berlin there are only two men out of the sixty full generals who are of bourgeois origin, all the others being of noble birth. There are no less than forty-nine regiments where the corps of officers consists exclusively of aristocrats. This shows that the aristocratic element in the corps of officers in the German army is increasing, the percentage of plebeian-born officers having greatly diminished since the death of Emperor William I.
