My Position.
To the Editor:—In view of the fact that considerable discussion and adverse criticism has arisen because of the attitude I have maintained in endeavoring to carry out the quarantine as prescribed in accordance with the health ordinance of the city of Athens, I take this method of vindicating myself, and wish to say to the public that wherever I may have to attend contagious diseases the cases will have to submit to rigid quarantine as laid down by the ordinances of the city and the health laws of the state. In this way, and in no other, it is possible to stamp out contagious diseases, and it is for the good of the public that these regulations be maintained, strictly, and it behooves the people to assist in their enforcement. These conditions, of necessity, become irksome to those who are so unfortunate as to have to submit to them; but without their strict observance the ordinance becomes a dead letter. Those who have to submit to them naturally consider that an injustice is being done to them if they are discriminated against, and the burden of the matter falls upon the attendant who endeavors to do his duty.
