One of the warehouses of the Puget Sound Company, located on the W. & C. & R. north of the mill, is being taken down. The material will be shipped to Evans, Washington, to be used in the construction of the warehouses at that place. The size of the building here was 40x100 feet, and was one of the first warehouses that was built on the O. R. & N.

A combination header-binder, put in the field some days ago by C. A. Barrett & Co., is doing splendid work and is highly satisfactory to the purchaser. The machine is considered far superior to the binder manufactured by Wood's illustrious namesake back in Minnesota. In addition to having the advantage of conversion into either header or binder it has roller bearings and runs smooth as one of the Colonel's monologues at a limberger banquet.

The following, from the Salmon, Idaho, Recorder, will be read with interest by "Hank" Caplinger, and other bear hunters of this vicinity: "Charles Metz returned Monday from a bear hunt on Big creek, 30 miles from Salmon. He killed 23 bears and brought in the skins. He used steel traps to catch his game. Those pelts are valued at something over $300. Mr. Metz is quite a noted bear slayer, and he knows the haunts of bruin perhaps better than any other man in the country. The animals are more plentiful this spring than they have been for some years past. At least 40 bears have been killed this spring in the Big Creek section."

MITCHELL IS SHOT TO DEATH

Slayer of "Holy Roller" Meets Death at Hands of Sister.

Seattle, Wash., July 12.—Revenge, terrible, swift and premeditated sums up the killing of George Mitchell by his eighteen-year-old sister Esther Mitchell today. Esther Mitchell is the girl for whom George shed the blood of Franz Edmund Creffield when he shot down the leader of the so-called "Holy Rollers" in Seattle on May 7th. It was because of her alleged maltreatment by the fanatical leader that Mitchell took his life and risked his own, and his own cold-blooded murder is his reward.

Mitchell was about to board the 4:30 train at the Union depot for Portland, where he was to take up his residence and begin his life anew, when Esther left her two brothers ostensibly for the purpose of bidding George good bye, but instead, as George turned half around to greet her she produced a revolver hidden under a cloak hung over her arm, and fired once, the bullet entering the left ear.

Mitchell fell to the ground dead, and the weapon of death and destruction was wrenched from the hand of the child murderer by her brother Fred, while another brother, Perry Mitchell, caught the trembling form of his sister in his arms, crying out: "Oh, Esther, how could you do it."

Quickly a commotion arose in the depot and the protection of the police was offered to the girl. She submitted to arrest without protest, and when interrogated as to why she had committed the crime answered, "I was commanded to do it."

At the police headquarters Chief Wapenstein questioned the girl as to her motives for the crime. "I killed him because he killed Joshua. We were commanded to do it," she said.
