BLOOD HOUNDS HUNT CHILD

Son of Walla Walla Photographer Lost in Mountains at Toll Gate.

A Milton special to the East Oregonian says: The 4-year-old son of R. L. Brittan, a photographer of Walla Walla, is missing since 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

The Brittan family passed through Milton several days ago enroute to Tollgate, 18 miles from Milton. The little boy went to a store to get some candy and roamed off.

The local authorities sent to the Walla Walla penitentiary and got bloodhounds and traced the child to a stream near Tollgate, called Looking Glass, but could not find any trace.

The people in the neighborhood are very much worked up over the affair. They fear wild animals have gotten the child. A crowd of men left Milton yesterday afternoon to help in the search.

Fay LeGrow of this city was communicated with last evening by Walla Walla parties asking him to send men from Athena to assist in the search for the child. This morning he and J. C. Stamper formed a party consisting of Hank Caplinger, Willis Bush, Will Dobson, H. O. Worthington, Ross Maloney, Chas. Gay, John Peeler and Hugh Robie, which left for the Toll Gate shortly before noon.

The men for the most part are familiar with mountain life, and are thoroughly acquainted with the country in which the child disappeared. They will be a valuable addition to the ranks of the posse already hunting for the lost child. Mr. LeGrow was informed this morning that the bloodhounds had twice trailed the missing child to a deserted sheep camp and there all trace was lost. This fact leads to the conclusion that a cougar has made away with the little one, as it would be an easy matter for the animal to carry its burden above ground for almost any distance, thus putting the scent of the dogs at a total disadvantage.

It is stated on good authority that the Peacock Milling property at Milton and Freewater has been transferred to Warren Raymond, of Walla Walla.
