Will Dobson, Fred Boyd, Millard Kelly and Tom Gilkie had a way-up good time on their hunting trip. Three deer fell before lucky shots of the hunters, while grouse and trout became a common contribution to the camp larder. "I John" Dobson sustained his reputation as camp chef with a song froid that would pale the cheek of Delmonica's Frenchman, and his sour dough gods and juicy venison steaks were classed enough for the Waldorf-Astoria dining room. As a bawler of wood and drawer of water, Kelly's grouchy attitude muddled in imagination in no discordant vein with Edwin Markham's "Man With the Hoe," while Boyd's capacity for dishwashing easily lifted that occupation above the rank of camp scullion. Gilkie is absolutely worthless for anything except to hunt and preside at bean banquets.

Temple was the star witness and presented statistics showing that the cost of producing a bushel of wheat on $50 an acre wheat land is 65 cents per bushel. All witnesses were cross examined by W. W. Cotton attorney for the O. R. & N., while the farmer's evidence was introduced by Attorney General Crawford and District Attorney Phelps.
