A diabolical act was perpetrated at McBride's livery stable Tuesday night when some fiend endeavored to mutilate four driving horses by slaughtering them with a knife. A sorrel team and a gray team were selected and each horse was slit in the sheth. The cuts made were slight, though deep enough to bleed, so that the legs and hoofs were stained, leading to the discovery of the deed. The horses show no ill effects from the cuts thus far. Mr. McBride is totally at a loss to divine the purpose of the perpetrator. He thinks it possible, from the nature of the cuts, that some injection to cause disease may have been made, though none of the horses have yet been sick. Milton, Pendleton and Walla Walla have in turn been visited by the horse mutilator, but in each case reported from these towns, stallions have been maimed.
