WILL NOT SOON LOSE FAVOR

Reason Why Motion Picture Should Not, for a Long Time to Come, Continue Popular.

The search for the limitations of the tion picture and placing of a date or the expiration of its hold on the public, are now among the most popu ar indoor sports. That the picture as an art, has its limitations tain, but we have never been able to see where those binding cords were any less elastic than those of the apoken drama or of the printed story. 'Action" is a prime necessity of all three forms; when that movement is lacking, and the story becomes a character study, either of a people or an individual, the balance must be evened up by the player's unusually good work or the artistic handling of the subject. Many a novelist has his reliance on his skill with the pen and won out, but many more have found that their weaving of fine sen tences could not hide the fact that the story was wanting. Many a playwright and actor have pinned their faith to the strong lines in a piece, to "that delicate medium of expression, the human voice," and have scored, but many more have found that their skill could not make up for the loss of plot complication. Wherein are the limitations of the motion picture, if perhaps less wide in their scope, any different in principle?

One of the rarest things in motion pictures is a real comedy. Many alleged humorous pictures are produced but it is an unfortunate fact that most of them consist of cheap and some times coarse slapstick stuff in which there is a marked absence of anything witty. Once in a long time a com-pany stumbles on something really funny, but with the exception of the Keystone pictures, a consistent series of good comedies has never been pro Accordingly there was rejoic ing at the announcement that George Ade would write three series of come dies for the screen.

London was startled the other day by the appearance in Fleet street and the Strand of an eccentrically attired young man who distributed souvenirs on his journey. WATCH WILL ADJUST ITSELF

Remarkably Simple Method of Making Timeplece That is Too Fast or

Frederick E. Ward sends to the Scimethod of making a watch that is too method is to turn the hands backward or forward or to stop the balance wheel with a toothpick.

If a watch be removed from its chain and hung by its bow on a hook or nall so that it swings free it will be found to oscillate back and forth like a pendulum. This motion is caused by the motion of the parts of the escapement. The swinging either accelerates or slows down the running of the watch. Its exact effect varies with individual watches, depending upon the weight and size of the case. Whether it makes the watch gain or lose, and how much, can be found by experiment, say, by hanging the watch up for ten hours and checking it by the wireless signals that are sent ou at noon and 10 p. m. by the govern-ment station at Radio, Va., and can be caught by any but the crudest wireless receivers.

The average watch gains about two seconds an hour, when hanging free. Some, however, lose. When the precise gain or loss has been ascertained ideas. Here are a the regulator should be adjusted. If the watch gains it should be made to run a trifle slow.

Now, by repeated trials, the owner can learn precisely how many seconds his watch gains or loses. When this error has accumulated long enough make an adjustment advisable, all he has to do is to hang up his watch for the right number of hours to bring Its second hand back or forward to the correct position.

Should a watch be found neither to gain nor to lose when hanging, it can be made to respond by hooking a piece of metal to the stem, thus raising the center of oscillation.
