MUCH DAMAGE FROM STORMS

A series of storms have done considerable damage in this county and the Walla Walla valley.

Sunday afternoon rain fell in torrents south and west of Athens. Between here and Adams and south of Adams, the rain was heavy. The water came out of the fields, ran across the railroad track and the main road in floods, and travelers were hard pressed to make their way over the roads.

On Monday afternoon a cloud was seen to form in the west, and moving to the north of Athens in a funnel shape descended in full force on Hells, where a veritable waterpout was experienced. The flood raced through the streets, tearing up sidewalks and filling basements. The flood waters poured down upon the Gerking flat farms, resulting in much damage to the alfalfa hay crop, most of which was either in the window or in the shock. Dr. W. R. Scott lost his entire outfit, the floods floating it off and covering it up with mud and debris. A cow which was in its path narrowly escaped. Arthur Donglas also lost considerable hay.

Tuesday a terrific wind and rain storm struck the foot hills south and east of Walla Walla. The wind assumed the proportions of a cyclone, uprooting orchards and blowing farm buildings over. Near Prescott a waterpout broke and a ten year old boy lost his life in the flood, and considerable damage to crops resulted.

ALASKA'S FERTILE LANDS.

Facts About Our Vast and Little Underestimated Territory.

Alaska is the most misunderstood and misrepresented section of the United States. People generally, and sincerely, believe that the name Alaska is synonymous with snow and ice and couple it accordingly with ice cream freezers and cold drinks. Yet the principal cities of Alaska along its southern coast line—Juneau, Ketchikan, Cordova, Valdez and Seward—do not average as cold in midwinter as New York and are seldom as cold as Baltimore and Washington during cold waves.

Alaska is one-fifth the size of the whole United States, and its population is about 60,000 square miles, nearly three times the size of the German empire, spreads from the temperate zone to the arctic circle. Not one quarter of it is in the latter. Below the circle lies a magnificent belt of fertile soil.

It is estimated by government authorities that the agricultural area of Alaska's fertile valleys and plains, on many of which cattle can be wintered without feeding, aggregate 30,000 square miles, with a climate like that of northern Europe—Norway, Finland and Sweden. This land is richer and more productive than that of any other country in the world, well watered, fairly well timbered, and 320 acres are open free to the settler if he wishes to take up a homestead.—John A. Sleicher to Leslie's.

In ancient times, when Scotland always had work for her soldiers to do, all young men were required to perfect themselves in archery. They preferred to play golf, and so serious a rival did the game become that it was for a time suppressed and made a capital offense. That curious law never has been repealed and may still be found on the statute book. There seems to be no record, however, of the law ever having been enforced.
