Natural Pillows.
The pollock tree provides the natives of British Honduras with splendid material for pillows and mattresses. It is a common soft wood growth with a large pear shaped fruit, which has a hard shell, changing to almost black when ripe, and containing a short staple brown fluff or silk fiber. The fluff is about a quarter of an inch long, more like the finest of women's hair than fiber, and is used extensively for filling pillows and mattresses. It will not become hard, even after years of service. The natives occasionally expose it to the sunlight for a day or two and put it back as good as ever.

Mountain ranch crops are forging to the front as a result of favorable weather conditions of the past two weeks. Grain crops are coming along well, and the large acreage of potatoes are just coming through the ground. The prospects are good for a crop of Mountain tubers this season. The soil was in prime condition at planting time, the middle of June, and with expected fall rains, the crop should realize perfect maturity. This is the opinion of Mr. Hyatt, one of
