What Makes the Difference

"Why do you charge so much for a Player Piano than for piano—$395.00 for your cheapest Player and only $150.00 for your cheapest piano," asked one of our friends the other day. It occurred to us that others might have the same thought, so we wish to explain.
 To begin with, our $150.00 Piano, we are convinced, will stand up perfectly when used as a piano is used in the average home, but we are not sure that it would stand up satisfactorily if subjected to the hard usage of a Player. It is estimated that a modern player piano is played from ten to twenty times as much as a straight piano in the average home and because of this and the fact that a player plays the difficult arrangements with their creating effect as readily as the more simple sort of music, a piano has to be well built in order to stand up and stay in tune.
 Then, the player action used in our $395.00 Player is an up-to-the-minute, free-from-trouble action—a combination we know will please, and one which will not cause us trouble as time goes on. A cheap player action installed in our $150.00 piano could easily be sold for $275.00 but we could not recommend it.
 A Piano or Player is an investment of years, a lifetime investment in many cases, therefore we always recommend the best to our customer for the value he pays. There is full value for every additional dollar you have to pay for our Haines Bros., Haselton Bros., or for the Glorious Old Chickering. In any case, see us and our Pianos and Players before you buy.
 We will save you money.
