INDUSTRIES AND THE WAR

Agriculture, says an exchange, and all productive industries of the west will be expanded and made more important by the war with Germany, for the simple reason that the government will become an enormous buyer of products.

The patriotic action of railroad managers and copper and metal producers shows the nation that it has nothing to fear from "big business", and that as a matter of fact the largest interests of the country are loyal to the cause.

The shipbuilding industry will become, next to the army and navy and the transportation system, the right hand of the government, and the call for a thousand new sea going craft from the largest warship to the smallest power launch will be met.

The war industries will have a great influence upon the labor market and the demand for the services of skilled and common labor will be as great at home as the demand for men to enter the army and navy and their services will be as patriotic.

Fortunately for the country there is a better understanding and the bonds of co-operation between capital and labor are stronger than ever before. The willingness to arbitrate differences and the spirit of concession are marked features of the times.

In general efficiency, and the absence of disturbing and trouble making elements, our country is probably the strongest in the world—presenting a homogeneous mass of one hundred millions and over of citizens who are the peers of any in the world.

It will be found that while this nation has had the least militarism, and in actual preparedness has been the least forward of any nation under the sun the way every feature made necessary by war conditions will be taken up and completed on short notice will surprise the strongest of the old world military monarchies.

Conditions of the wheat crop in Oregon is given by the government crop report for April as follows: Condition April 1, 84 per cent of normal as against averages for ten years of 94 per cent. For the whole United States the condition of the crop is 63 per cent of normal.

The governor of Oregon urges a mobilization of the agricultural resources of the state so that production of staple crops may be increased to meet the needs of war conditions. As far as the staple crops are concerned it would seem that self interest, now that prices are so high, will prompt the farmer to raise all the produce possible.

The campaign for vacant lot gardens has spread to the White House. President Wilson implores the Nation to tackle the food famine before the famine begins.

A Main street business man suggests that Athena have a flag pole from which to fly the Stars and Stripes, as many other towns are doing. A good suggestion.

If the high cost of living continues soaring after the war is under way, in proportion to what the cost is before the war begins, where will it end?
