Frederick Flint has returned to Athena from Seattle, where he was engaged in shipbuilding work, and is now getting ready for his annual sheep shearing expedition into Montana when the season for the extraction of the fleeces comes round. Fred, while he walked out with other unionized shipworkers, strongly disavowed to Judge Richards the other day any propensity to fostering a Bolshevik biceps growth, or in any manner showing inclination to associate with the "Reds." He has a plausible story of his own which he relates in this connection—and we believe that the Judge believes him; only he won't admit it.

was uncovered, there was no grain in storage, so the damage results only in replacing the destroyed portion of the roof, which amounts to covering practically one half the east portion of the building. The wind also picked up a sheep shed on the Barrett place near town and tossed it from over a bunch of sheep without injuring one of them. Tree limbs were blown promiscuously about over the streets and telephone wires were out of commission in some instances.
