SEASONABLE DISHES.

Gelatin is an easily digested food and one especially good for desserts after a hearty meal.

Jellied Prunes.—Wash one pound of prunes, soak in cold water over night and cook until tender; cut each prune into three or four pieces (discarding the stones). There should be about five cupsful of the prunes and liquid. Dissolve one package of gelatin softened in one cupful of cold water in the hot prune juice; add one cupful of sugar and one-half cupful of orange marmalade or the juice of one lemon; stir until it begins to thicken, then turn into a mold. Set aside in a cool place.

Casserole of Rice and Veal.—Line a mold slightly greased with steamed rice. Fill the center with two cupsful of cold cooked, chopped veal, seasoned with salt, pepper, celery salt, cayenne, onion and lemon juice. Add one-fourth of a cupful of cracker crumbs, one egg slightly beaten and enough hot stock or water to moisten.

Cover the meat with rice, cover the rice with a buttered paper to keep out the moisture, and steam 45 minutes. Serve on a platter surrounded with tomato sauce.

Tomato Sauce.—Melt two table-spoonfuls of butter, add two table-spoonfuls of flour, and when well-blended and cooked add one cupful of strained tomato which has been cooked with a slice of onion for flavor. Cook all together, add one-half teaspoonful of salt, and one-eighth of a teaspoonful of pepper.

Cream of Celery With Almonds.—Cook two cupfuls of chopped celery until tender, then drain. Add a table-spoonful of corn starch mixed with a cupful of cream and one cupful of almond meats blanched and chopped. Cook until thick. Season with salt and paprika.

Peach Custard.—Arrange alternate layers of cake and sections of canned peaches in a dish and cover with a hot custard. Bananas, sweet oranges or preserves of various kinds may be used in place of the peaches.
