McNARY IS OPPOSED TO COOPERATIVE LAW PLAN

There is little value to the farmers and fruit growers of the country in the bill recently passed and signed by the president, authorizing cooperative organization of producers of agricultural products.

This is the judgment of Senator McNary, himself a fruit grower and a member of the agricultural committee of the senate, from which the bill was reported. He aided in its passage, as it was considered important by some of the Western interests. His own judgment is that it was unnecessary legislation.

The law purports to relieve producers from the penalties of the Sherman antitrust law in forming associations for the sale of their products. To avoid the charge that farmer monopolies were being fostered at the expense of the consumer, provisions were inserted which authorize the secretary of agriculture to interfere if he believes that prices are being "unduly enhanced," and to certify those responsible for such undue prices to the attorney general.

"This law will not, in my judgment, help to move an Oregon prune," said Senator McNary. "Our growers are already organized and doing the things which this law purports to give them the right to do."

"They have not been in fear of prosecution under the anti-trust law in cooperating for the marketing of their products. This law does not relieve from responsibility should their action result in unreasonable prices for products of the orchard and farm."

"This law transfers prosecution, where it might be faced in the first instance at the hands of the attorney general, to the prior inquiry of the secretary of agriculture. I do not regard it as having any significance for Oregon producers. It was asked for by certain interests, principally by an organization of wheat growers, who thought that certain plans they wished to put into effect might be interfered with under the anti-trust law."

tion filed in Justice Richards' court at Athena by J. A. Lumsden for the recovery of an account of $28.30. This action was also settled. The defendant's father claimed ownership of the stock, which had never been transferred on the books of the company, however, and is said to have adjusted both the attachment proceedings.

BORDER FIGHT ON DRUG RING IS REAL THRILLER

The brains of Texas rangers and an army of customs officers and narcotic and liquor agents is pitted against the endless ingenuity of a great band of international smugglers as a thrilling battle for supremacy as the romantic and adventurous days of half a century ago ever knew.

Revelations of the past few weeks have brought to light the details of this battle of wits on the Rio Grande that make the plots of red-blooded fictionists seem dull and old-fashioned.

Highly organized bands of drug smugglers, with agents in all European capitals and China, employing beautiful and brainy women, booze smugglers who stop at nothing to evade prohibition laws, are keeping up a 24-hour fight every day to win fortunes.

The government is fighting back with all forces, and the frequent brushes makes life on Rio Grande interesting at all times.

Liquors of every country find their way into Mexico and then across the border. Rhine wines, Italian wines—there is no label that inspectors in this country are not familiar with.

Some of the most ingenious methods are used to transport smuggled goods by the drug traffickers. It was believed by narcotic inspectors that the height of ingenuity had been reached this week when, after permission had been granted friends of a deceased Chinaman, who died in Juarez, to have the body buried in Texas, it was learned that great quantities of morphine and opium had been placed in his embled corpse.

HE CAUGHT STEELHEADS

John Ross was over from his fruit ranch on the Walla Walla river, Tuesday, and set the local anglers "Spiffy" over his reports of catching steelhead salmon in a pool back of his barn. True to form, John observed the closed season on other trout by throwing back fine specimens 18 in. in length. And Marion Hansell believes that Johnny did just that same.

Fishing Time

Is Almost Here

To all ardent disciples of old Ike Walton the opening day for trout is a long looked for event. "Dyed in the Wool" fishermen have long since repaired their rods and reels, cleaned out their fly books and determined their wants for the opening day. One glance at our stock of fishing tackle will convince the most particular fisherman that in our shelves only fisherman's "necessities" of proven superiority will be found.

Rods, reels, baskets, lines, flies, hooks, leaders, spinners, licenses, etc.—we have them all.
