Courage

Courage is from first to last a victory achieved over one of the most powerful emotions of human nature. . . . It may fairly be questioned if any human being is naturally courageous. Many are naturally pugnacious, or irascible, or enthusiastic, and these passions when strongly excited may render them insensible to fear. But take away the conflicting emotions, and fear reasserts its dominion; consistent courage is always the effect of cultivation.—John Stuart Mill.

Identified

"A man is easy to read," said Roberts to nobody in particular as he and a few of his friends lounged in the window of the club one evening. Just then a street car stopped in front of the window, and Perkins and his wife and sister got off.

"Which one is his wife?" some one wanted to know. Nobody could answer until Roberts remarked: "She is the woman he didn't help off the car."

No Spoiled Food for Her

"Now, you understand, Bridget, the jelly is to be served next to the last." "But faith, missus, ye told me the bloomin' stuff was molded so I throwed it out."
