AMERICAN DISARMAMENT

The National Republic says "there are pseudo-Americans always anxious to put this country in the wrong, who pretend to believe that the United States has made no sacrifice in behalf of world disarmament. They choose to overlook the fact that the United States, alone among the great nations of the world, reduced her army to a peace basis after the World War.

"But no nation ever surrendered so much in behalf of disarmament, at a time when the rest of the world was armed as it never before was in peace time, by making the concessions which America made at the naval disarmament conference called by President Harding.

"At the time this conference was called the United States was well on the way toward the realization of President Wilson's suggestion that the United States should become 'incomparably the greatest naval power in the world'—a naval power so strong that no nation would ever have dreamed of attacking us.

"At the close of the World War the battleship tonnage of the United States stood at 814,500, while that of Great Britain, our naval rival, stood at 972,750, the heavier gun power of the American fleet, however, giving the United States the preponderance of sea-power. The United States had under construction, however, an additional battleship tonnage of 552,800, including four battleship cruisers stronger than any other existing in the world. With the completion of the 1916 program of naval construction the United States would have had a naval force equal in strength to the fleets of Great Britain and Japan combined.

"Neither Great Britain nor Japan was in financial position to match this program of construction. Great Britain and Japan at the Washington conference accepted limitation only on battleships—the class of vessels in which the United States was about to lead the world. In the construction of cruisers, submarines and other classes of war vessels, both Great Britain and Japan have outdistanced the United States since the Washington conference was held. The United States having limited construction of battleships, we have not kept pace with these two other naval powers in the building of vessels of the remaining types.

"The action of our government at the naval limitation conference cost the United States nearly a half billion dollars in the scrapping of vessels under construction and in the reconstruction of existing ships permissible under that agreement.

"What naval power ever made such a sacrifice in the interests of limitation of armament? And how often is reference made to this sacrifice, the spirit of which has not been very carefully observed by naval powers which have entered upon feverish activity in the construction of types of vessels not restricted by the Washington agreement?"

FOOLING THEM ONCE MORE

State Market Agent Spence says that last November the big dailies of the country proclaimed the glad tidings that wheat gambling to the extent of market control and price fixing was a vice of the past; that Secretary of Agriculture Jardine had issued a fiat to the Chicago Board of Trade that it must change its system and limit its activities if it would continue to operate. Immediately the Board adopted a "regulation" as per Mr. Jardine's suggestions, to place a limit on how high or low prices should go, and the press dispatches stated that "heavy penalties are provided for anyone buying or selling above or below the limits set by the directors." These restrictions would permit Demand & Supply to get back on the job and the wheat growers would get the market price. However, five months later we read in first-page headlines where "Speculators Rule in Wheat Market," etc., etc.

At the request of friends and organizations interested in public education, J. O. McLaughlin, superintendent of the Corvallis city schools, has become the democratic candidate for the office of State Superintendent of Schools. Mr. McLaughlin views the outstanding public problems in Oregon to be more moral training in our schools, better rural schools, and the selection of a state superintendent. He believes that schools must emphasize moral training and law observance; that the rural school deserves the largest consideration; that school text books can be secured from the publishing companies at lower prices; that both vocational and academic educations are essential; That teachers should be adequately trained; That schools are the safeguards for a democratic system of government. All of which reads well, and if put into actual practice and supervision, would greatly advance Oregon's educational system.

A real builder of the west was lost to Oregon in the passing of William McMurray, railroad official and settlement worker, at Portland this week. He was one of the big men of the Northwest—one of the few who threw selfishness aside along the trail of progress.

Here's at least one river we know of that cannot be taken as the background for fishin' yarns—that lava flow from Mauna Loa.

Dimples are again fashionable, even though some of them are made up of plastic dough.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS

Tomorrow night the Standard will present "Three Women," with May McAvoy, Pauline Frederick and Lew Cody in the leading roles. Sunday night, Zane Grey's beautiful story, "The Light of Western Stars" will be screened. Wednesday night, Milton Sills comes to the Standard in "The Knockout," a thrilling, two-act action drama of the Canadian wilds. The usual comedy and news reels are programed.

Chemical Affinity

This is the attraction between different chemical elements which causes them, when brought together under proper conditions, to unite and form compounds. For instance, if oxygen and hydrogen are brought together under the right conditions they will unite in the proportion of two atoms of hydrogen to one of oxygen, which forms water. The attraction known as "chemical affinity" is supposed to be electrical.—Pathfinder Magazine

MARKERS PUT ON VETERANS' GRAVES

Veterans of the World War who are buried in Walla Walla will soon be honored by the placing of memorial stones at the grave. The marking is being done by the Disabled American Veterans association, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the American Legion.

The grave stones were ordered about eighteen months ago, and the first shipment has arrived. Others are due in the near future. The stones are furnished by the government and delivered without charge. The cost of installing is borne jointly by the three veterans organizations.

A systematic canvass is to be made to get the necessary data so that every veteran buried at Walla Walla will have a marker at his grave. Relatives of soldiers who have died who have not furnished the required information are requested to get in touch with any of the three organizations of veterans.

DR. BEST'S PLATFORM

If I am nominated and elected I will during the term of my office stand for rigid economy in expenditures; against enactment of unnecessary laws; for reduction of taxes; against public officials buying private property at forced sale for private gain; for extension of market roads; for building up the business interest of the state; for better education; for conservation of state resources; for a Board of Pardons and the abolition of all unnecessary state commissions; for the promotion of the farming, stock raising, mining and lumber industries of the state; for the moral advancement of the people and the suppression of scandals in public affairs.

I will protect the interests of the Pendleton Round-Up at all times.

I desire to have printed upon the ballot "Economy, public decency, tax reduction, extension of market roads and better primary education."

WHEAT CONTRACTS MADE

A half million bushels of wheat for July and August delivery have been contracted for so far in Umatilla county, according to an announcement of Henry Collins, of the Collins flour mills, Pendleton. The wheat was contracted for on a basis of $1.16 a bushel.
