Baree, Son of Kazan

A stupendous epic of the North by that master of them all,

James Oliver Curwood

What man or woman or child lives whose imagination is not fired by adventure in that engulfing of silence and mystery? "Baree, Son of Kazan" will take them into the heart of God's last frontier—a great, white world where men and women live in romance and adventure; tragedy and joy; where they make no fight for riches, or power, or fame, but struggle in this stern, white world—terrible in its emptiness, its vastness and its mercilessness for the weak—simply that they may live. And against the savage background of the mystic North will stand clear-cut as a cameo, slender as a reed; wild, palpitating, beautiful—Anita Stewart as Nepeese, the magnetic daughter of the snows. She is more than a picture. She is Life!

The Shock Punch

From the Liberty Magazine story by John Monk

Folks like this big, husky, handsome, regular guy, and in this one he'll tickle their funny-bones and does some high class knock-down and drag-out fighting with Walter Long and "Gunboat" Smith, the old warhorse of the prize ring, who appeared opposite Dix in his first starring picture, "Manhattan." Frances Howard is the girl in "The Shock Punch." She's a nifty stick of dimpled dynamite in this film, and the fans are going to crave her company very much.
