The Social Side

Mrs. Hawks Honored

One of the most enjoyable events of the summer occurred Monday afternoon when Mrs. F. S. LeGrow complimented her house guest Mrs. Byron Hawks of Bonners Ferry, Idaho at a bridge tea. A profusion of gay flowers decked the attractive rooms of the Le Grow home, and guests sufficient for six tables were bidden for the affair. Mrs. Glenn Dudley held high score and was presented with a beautiful fern as trophy. Mrs. W. P. Littlejohn received the consolation prize and Mrs. Hawks was also the recipient of a dainty gift. At the tea hour, dainty salads, ices and confections carrying out a pink and green color scheme were served. Mrs. Le Grow was assisted by Mrs. E. C. Prestbye, Mrs. C. L. McFadden and Mrs. Max Hopper. Other guests included, Mrs. James Lieuallen Jr., of Adams, Mrs. Sarah Jane Bowles and Mrs. Maebelle Toner of Walla Walla, Mrs. Helen Butler of Dallas, Mrs. Bert Logsdon, Mrs. Henry Dell, Mrs. Frank Ames, Mrs. C. The hostess served dainty ices at the tea hour.

Napoleon Unique in Capacity for Work

Napoleon "could work for eighteen hours for a stretch at one subject or many." No 8-hour day for him. "Never," says Roederer, "have I seen his mind without spring; not in the strain of body, wrath or the most violent exercise." One of his ministers complained that "it would require a constitution of iron to go through with what we do. After a day's ride in a carriage we no sooner alight than we mount on horseback and sometimes remain in our saddles for ten or twelve hours successively." In his fortieth year Napoleon rode ninety miles without stirrups in five hours and a half. His surgeon, Percy, said that he was "made of iron, soul and body, always on horseback, galloping about in all weathers, bivouacking, working like ten men, never ill, never tired." Even his enemies declared that Napoleon had a capacity for work equal to that of four other men.—Scientific Monthly.

Personal Experience?

A few weeks ago in one of the state high schools, in an English class, this little episode occurred: The teacher had asked the pupils, for the following day, to write an editorial, and in giving suggestions had said that "poppy love" would be an interesting topic to work up. A member of the class, who was busy copying the assignment when the above statement was made, looked up and innocently inquired: "Does it have to be a personal experience?"—Indianapolis News.
