JUROR'S HOME WRECKED

Family of Man Who Helped Convict Sacco and Vanzetti Bombed.

Boston, Mass.—The East Milton home of Lewis McHardy, one of the jurors who found Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti guilty of the Braintree payroll murders in 1920, was wrecked by a powerful bomb. Five members of the McHardy family were thrown from their beds and were shaken up badly, but aside from a cut on the head, suffered by Mrs. McHardy, none was injured.

The explosion took place just a few hours before the Massachusetts supreme judicial court assembled to hear final arguments from Sacco and Vanzetti's counsel, who are fighting for a new trial. As a result of the bomb outrage, additional guards have been placed about the courthouse, the statehouse and the state prison, where the two anarchists are held.

Herculean Viewpoint

A colored man who owned a large wagon and a small horse was hired to haul away some trash from a home. The trash contained many bricks and made an awkward load. As he was ready to drive away, the owner of the house said to him: "If you intend to haul such large loads you need a larger horse." The colored man replied: "If you had to lift him up every morning like I do you would think he is heavy enough."
