TREATMENT OF INFLUENZA

Concerning the treatment of influenza the following is taken from a recent report of the state board of health:

Now that influenza is undoubtedly epidemic in this state, it is well to know how to treat this disease and how to control it. In a preceding letter we warned the public of the possibility of an epidemic and gave a list of precautions to be taken to prevent the spread of this disease. Both the cure and prevention of influenza depend on knowing the cause. The best way to keep from taking influenza is to keep away from people having this highly contagious disease.

When you feel an attack of influenza coming on, take a laxative and a glass of hot lemonade and go to bed early. Eat lightly, drink water freely and stay in bed until all symptoms have disappeared. Isolate yourself. Do not kiss or even shake hands. Just because some one has passed this disease on to you is no excuse for your being careless. This is not a spectacular course of treatment nor will it produce striking results, but it will cut down greatly the chances for complications, such as pneumonia and other infections.

The streptococcus hemolyticus is usually unable to invade the healthy body but gains entrance in persons who are run down by influenza. Streptococcus pneumonia is a very serious complication and the chances of pulling through after this infection has invaded the body are none too good.

The importance of calling in a physician early can not be too highly emphasized. Many of the complications of influenza can be prevented by proper treatment. For the sake of others it is well to remember that influenza is a contagious disease and it is up to you to keep it to yourself. Use your handkerchief and prevent the spread of influenza. Sneezing and coughing spray out droplets of moisture loaded with germs and any one nearby is almost certain to get a good dose of this. If you have influenza, go to bed and isolate yourself.

—AND HOW

Casual reading of the European situation to be faced by the League Council which convened this week, makes one wonder what of the Locarno spirit—and how. Germany is openly pessimistic over results of the peace pact so long as her territory remains occupied by allied troops; Mussolini in public speech proclaims that all the world is arming and Italy must be prepared. Failure of last week's conference at Geneva for the control and manufacture of arms is ascribed to the disinclination of certain European powers to reveal data concerning their armaments, which naturally arouses suspicion and dissatisfaction among countries which do not manufacture, but must buy arms abroad, and thus necessarily disclose their secrets of national defense. France grooms the privilege of no naval restriction whatever, and England wants the inside track on cruiser construction. Here at home, Uncle Sam is chewing his tobacco a little finer while he keeps count of Britain's cruiser tonnage, and last week when Kellogg appeared in the senate nursing the latest effort toward prevention of war, instead of receiving the glad hand all he got was a few mumbles over "reservations" and a frosty bath.

It is easy for one to become susceptible to calls from the wild and contract the habit of rustication in places other than one's own home town. That conservative Cal has caught the bug that tolls men away from their desks to ramble in paths that lead to golf links, fishing trips and hunting grounds is disclosed in his advocacy of the serious need of a summer white house for use of the executive family, to be located somewhere in the hills near the national capitol.

The king of the Britains has made a brave fight to survive the ravages of a critical illness and his subjects have proven loyalty to him by their marked solicitude for his welfare, and their prayers for his recovery. The world knows King George for a kindly sovereign and a ruler whose traits of character symbolize liberality to a greater degree than is shown by other hereditary rulers.

Five Portland detectives and a deputy coroner are in disagreement over the probable cause of a woman's death. The detectives say their construction of the case shows that the lady had fallen from her porch while intoxicated. The deputy coroner maintains that she had been robbed and beaten, and fell only after a terrific struggle. A consensus of opinion is that the woman is dead.

It is barely possible that Bolivia and Paraguay are staging hostilities for mere entertainment of President-elect Hoover while he is taking his South American jaunt. However, any warfare these peppery republics may decide to pull off, would be sidishows in comparison with what Hoover has seen before.
