FOOD FOR THE TEA-TABLE

The afternoon tea hour affords a delightful opportunity to meet one's friends in an informal way. All hostesses will welcome any suggestions which will lend grace to such functions.

The sandwiches and cakes to be served should be quite simple, with a bit of candied peel, a few nuts and a dish of salted nuts, which will be plenty to serve for any informal tea.

The cup of tea is the thing, and food should go with it in small quantities, as too substantial a repast in the afternoon or early evening spoils the appetite for the evening meal.

If one has a tea wagon all the accessories may be brought in at once. Part of the enjoyment of a tea party is the attractive table and the service. A pot of boiling water is always necessary for the guest who has a preference as to the strength of her tea. The sugar, lemon, or cream is added by the hostess herself in small teas. In larger ones the guests help themselves, or they are passed.

Fruit Canapes.—Soften one-half cupful of sweet butter, add one-fourth-cupful each of finely chopped dates and nutmeats and two tablespoonful of crystallized ginger and blend thoroughly. Spread on squares of buttered graham bread, sliced very thin.

Cheese and Jelly Pastries.—Prepare a rich crust as for pie, cut into circles, then cut small rings from the centers of half of the circles. The old-fashioned tart that our grandmothers made were prepared so. Cream a three-ounce package of cream cheese, adding enough cream to soften. Spread the whole surface of the circle with the cheese. A maraschino cherry, or three, heaped with the cheese in the center, makes another tasty tart.

There is no form of sandwich so attractive for teas as the open sandwich. Cut into rounds of thin sliced bread, buttered and decorated with piped mayonnaise, cream cheese, and made attractive by chopped green and red pepper. One may have an endless variety.

Origin of Five Races,
According to Legend

The Iroquois Indians of Canada, in their efforts to account to themselves for the existence of the five races of men with which they are acquainted, have shaped the following legend: In the beginning the Great Spirit, in order to people the earth, went about making a man of each nation. He took a lump of earth and molded it into a man. This first man was a negro. Then he took another lump and molded another man. This was a Chinaman. Then he made an Indian in the same way and gave life to all three.

But two men, a Frenchman and an Englishman, remained to be created, and no earth was at hand wherewith to make them. What was to be done? The Great Spirit reached out his arm and seized the first animal that came His way. It was a butterfly. The Great Spirit clipped off its wings, added arms and legs and set it down in a corner of the earth. This was the first Frenchman.

Again extending His arm, the Great Spirit seized another animal. It was an ant. It was treated as the butterfly had been; it was given the face and soul of a man and was set down in another corner of the earth. This was the first Englishman.

This explains, says the Iroquois story, why the English and the French have always been able to make their way so easily about the earth. Made out of animals and not from lumps of earth, they go everywhere. This accounts, too, for the difference in the character of the Englishman and the Frenchman. The one has always preserved something of the industrious character of the ant, and the other something of the light ways of the butterfly.

Editorial

The groundhog didn't see his shadow here; yet it looks as if we are going to have about six months more of winter. Mr. Groundhog was too wise to come out of his warm burrow and freeze his feet looking for a sun that wasn't anywhere in sight. There has been the prediction that in the future weather will be controlled by man, but a prediction like that is perfectly safe to make, as this invention will be so far in the future that we will all be dead and buried before it will be completed. If old "Jupie Plusius" would only come up here and turn on a little heat instead of staying down in sunny California where the sun shines daily, he would certainly be appreciated. After a fellow climbs up a slippery roof to clean snow off it and gets a bad attack of rheumatism, he doesn't care whether he sees another flake of snow for the rest of his life. But cheer up; this cold snap has its advantages, as radio experts say that better radio reception is gained during the cold, clear nights; but it is unfortunate for those whose radios are not working or for those who have no radios at all. Next summer when we are fanning ourselves when the mercury is "90" in the shade, we will probably look back to winter and sigh for a little let up on the heat, for then at least, a person won't have to stand under a dripping ceiling to catch in a pan the elusive drops caused by melting ice on the roofs. So for the sake of suffering humanity, Jupie, please put on your snowshoes and break trail up here as quickly as you possibly can.
