Editorial
(Emery Rogers)

Are athletics all right? Do they hinder or help the school? Are they harmful or beneficial to the participants? When the school runs the sports, they are all right. When the sports run the school, they are all wrong. Studies should always come before athletics. If, in order to have sports, a school must sacrifice part of its output of knowledge to the students, athletics should be eliminated. Athletics teach the school boy and girl good sportsmanship and give them a source of recreation. There is no doubt that sports develop a person both mentally and physically. They teach one to think clearly and act quickly, and urge the student to put forth better efforts in different studies to keep, or become, eligible. Of course there is always the chance of athletics tearing a person down more than they build him up; perhaps the player isn't healthy enough to stand the vigorous exercise and exciting moments offered in sports. A person who is not in excellent physical condition should not participate in sports of any kind. There is also the danger of getting injured, especially in football. Slight painful injuries occur frequently but it is very seldom that a person is seriously injured in sports. When athletics do not hinder school work they are a good thing for a perfectly healthy person. Sports develop him physically and mentally; teach him good sportsmanship; and give him a source of recreation and enjoyment.

Classes
The community will be interested to know that the juniors have made $25.05 from their candy sales at the last three ball games. This makes a total of $57.05 in the treasury of the junior class at present.

Athletics
The Stanfield team lost to Athena Friday night by a score of 30-25. The Stanfield team piled up 5 points before the Athena boys could get started but the Athenians made 11 points before the opponents could make another score.
From then until the third quarter the Athena boys held the lead by a wide margin. In the third, however, the opponents made the Athena boys
