Editorial
(Arthur Crowley)
It is through the actions of a few disorderly students of the Athena high school that the school spirit is somewhat lowered. The school spirit has been very low in the past years but it is gradually getting better. In the last few years the students of the school have not taken a great deal of interest in any of the athletic games but now everything is being done to increase the school spirit and we hope in the near future that it will be brought about that we will have one hundred per cent school interest. In the sub-district tournament held at Helix enthusiasm of the finest type was shown by nearly all of the students attending. There are certain students of the Athena high school who should never be allowed to witness any of the school affairs because of their disorderly conduct. At some of the basket-ball games held here these individuals would sit up in the balcony, and shoot water guns and throw chalk. It seems as though these students would realize that this is "small town stuff" and that they would be ashamed of themselves. If these few individuals must shoot water guns and throw chalk we suggest that they stay home and enjoy themselves instead of coming to the school to do it. It is through these individuals that the school spirit is lowered and if these childish pranks were abolished the student body attitude would be much improved in spirit.

University of Oregon, Eugene.—The former editor and owner of an enterprising weekly newspaper, the McCleary Stimulator, has entered the school of journalism here in the person of Roy Craft, aged 21, from McCleary, Washington. A freshman, Craft plans to complete his education from the money he earned as a publisher.

Following his graduation from high school in 1925, Craft went to work on the Stimulator, then owned by D. Gerald Cloud, and soon became associate editor. Two and one-half years ago the young newspaperman, with the backing of the local bank, took over the paper. He successfully operated it for a year and a half, made some money as he went along, paid all the notes and then sold it in order to continue his education.
