

THE LONG TRAIL.

By I. Will Spiller.

For a moment the king of birds—the mightiest of the mighty, he who had won the title of "Outlaw" through the daring of his exploits—reeled in his upward flight, and collapsed, his mighty pinions falling grotesquely from their outspread position. Down, down he fell, lighting squarely in the lake and the rippling waves hid the lifeless body from sight. Thus ended one of the wilderness tragedies precipitated by the hand of man.

For a moment the lad stood motionless, watching the white capped waves as they raced one after the other over the surface of the lake driven on by the brisk morning breeze. On his face was written the unmingled feeling of chagrin and rejoicing; for just, but not all of his desire had been accomplished.

Far away over the mountain top circled another black speck and through the crisp morning air came the call of an eagle; but the call had nothing of rejoicing in it, rather there was a note of alarm, and fear. It was the call of a mate to the last one, and certainly no human voice could have carried with it the feeling of loneliness and mourning which was reflected in the wailing scream of this lonely bird, whose only companion had been so suddenly removed.

Meanwhile the boy wended his way home through the bright sunlight of the morning, the dog following close at his heels. His mind was far away among the tangles of his dreams, and he paid no heed to the time or place, arriving at the cabin only in time for breakfast.

When he finally arrived the old man had already set the table for the simple meal, and they both sat down together for the last time in many years, in fact neither knew for how long.

They ate in silence, and when the meal was finished both silently set about clearing away the remnants. During all this time neither had spoken a word; but as the task was finished, and the boy placed the pack upon his back and adjusted the shoulder straps he turned to the old man, and looked long into the withered face while in his eyes there began to gather a film which effort would not entirely dispel.

"Grandfather. When do you reckon we will see each other again?" There played over the features of the old man a strange expression as he answered.

"Son don't let that bother you. It may be a short while or the time may stretch into years, I cannot say for certain."

"Why do you say years, Granddad?" Again the old man's face was convulsed by some strong repressed emotion.

"God only knows that my son. Whether my destiny points, there must I go; but somewhere, come what may, we shall meet again and the meeting shall be all that happiness desires. Go now, my boy; for the hour is already growing late."

"Alright," answered the youth, "Good by."

"Good by son."

And so the two parted, the one to take the back trail into civilization, and the other to tread his own weary path alone—a path both thorny and difficult.

Watching alone by the cabin door the old man saw the boy turn and he entered the timber at the bend in the road, and wave a last farewell. Turning he entered the door and sat down on a rude bench by the table and buried his head in his hands. So the day faded away, and just as the sun touched the blue peaks, bathing them in a flood of gold, the old man rose from his bowed posture and went to the door where he watched the darkening shadows as they slowly obscured the path over which the youth had gone out of his life.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and for years it was supposed to be incurable. Doctors prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Catarrh is a local disease, greatly influenced by constitutional conditions and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is a constitutional remedy, it takes internally and acts thru the blood on all mucous surfaces of the system. Can't find Hall's Catarrh Cure? SKIN TROUBLES NO LONGER BOTHER BEAVERTON PEOPLE.

Do you feel rather lazy and unfit for work? Do you feel tired, even before your day's work is full accomplished, and at night you are nervous? Then you say you have the spring fever. This is only one of the symptoms resulting from impure blood, which generally occurs in the spring. There are times when the condition is more severe. There are then, skin eruptions, boils, pimples, and a condition of the skin known as itch. This is very troublesome and hard to cure, and if allowed to run may cause complications. To cure these disagreeable features is uppermost in every mind, and no household is without its special antidote, old fashioned remedies, mostly, which require time for operation. NOT so with ARCHES ALTERNATIVES for this is a quick, sure, and cheap method of treating these conditions. Beaverton People have found this medicine excellent and it is recommended to you by the . . .
