THE LONG TRAIL.

By I. Will Spillet.

For a minute the great cat stood over his fallen foe, his long tail lashing to and fro, and a gleam of white, sharp teeth showing through the snarling lips. He was watching for the first signs of life that he might strike a final blow; but there was no life in the motionless body, and the crimson stream from the open mouth told the story only too plainly.

The old man watching the tide of battle, saw with sudden apprehension the blow which had stunned the avalanche like attack of the dog. When he perceived, for the first time, the crimson blotch on the white sand and saw it spread, like the flames of a prairie fire, his whole frame was shaken with a mighty surge of anger which swept over him like the waves of an ocean.

From the sheath at his side he had, at the beginning of the battle, drawn his long, sharp hunting knife; but fearing that a misthrow might be disastrous to the dog, he had retained it unused. Now, as he saw the cougar preparing to strike again, he no longer restrained from using his weapon. The dark outline of the woods receded before his vision, and a flood of living fire seemed coursing through his veins, then his mind cleared and he saw again only the huge form with its uplifted paw ready to strike for the last time.

Up went his hand, and the knife balanced for a moment between his thumb and finger, then sped, like a burning brand through the stillness of the night, and it moaned a song of death as it flew. Once over, and then straight ahead, a gleaming shadow of death, of destruction. Shadow to meet shadow; death to meet death, with the direction of human intelligence to guide one, brute instinct the other.

No sound to break the stillness of the night, save the moaning of the flying missile, the stifled breathing of the great cat, and the horrible gurgle of blood as it is forced through the severed artery. These were the heralds of a moment of destiny; these the proclamations of the unusual.

Only a moment has elapsed between the launching of the knife and the time when it has found its mark, and buried itself behind the shoulder and between the ribs of the cougar, yet such is a moment of suspension, and to the man it seemed as though an eternity had rolled away. With a howl of mingled rage and pain the huge beast leaped into the air and fell backward, his blood mingling with the crimson flood of his adversary.

Quickly the old man strode to his prostrate companion and raised the mangled head, speaking softly to the dog. The muscles are convulsed slightly and the animal opens his eyes to stare into those of his master as though to reproach him for not being quicker in coming to his assistance. Then the man gathered the dog into his arms and strode away toward the cabin.

Inside, before the fire, he washed the bruised head in cold water and applied ointments, but his hands care-availed nothing and ere the night was well begun, the dog half raised himself on his front feet, whined, licked one hand of his master, and fell back with a moan. The faithful companion; the protector, slept in the quietness of the eternal night.

The man stroked the battle scarred head and called in vain; for there was no answering wag of the tail, nor even a whimper to reward his efforts, and he realized with a pang of sorrow that the best tie which bound him to the past was broken, and that ahead lay the long trail to be followed alone. So, sorrowfully, he wrapped the still form in a blanket and laid it by the door till the morning when he would place it by the lake where the sighing pines might keep it company as they had done in the past.

Into the Past.

Let us lay aside, for a time, the mirror of the present and raise the veil which shrouds the dark past, that we may gaze back through the labyrinth of human existence and disinter the dead past, resurrecting the actors, bringing back to existence the events which trashed their destiny. So we leave the old man with his sorrows and journey back through the summers and winters of years.

The spring of the year has clad the hill slopes and the valley in verdant green, broken only by the splashes of white orchards, glorious in the beauty of full bloom. Through the valley, at the foot of the hills, flows the majestic river, winding past the city; a city of trees, wonderful avenues and beautiful residences. Such is the setting of the stage as the veil of the past is swept aside.

"Helen, where are you going?" The speaker was a tall man, rather slim, with laughing blue eyes. The girl, his daughter, was very much like him, a little less tall, perhaps, but in the eyes there was the same merry twinkle.

"Oh, nowhere father. Just down into the city." She turned her head away as she replied, but she could not fail to catch the troubled look which crossed the features of the man at the answer.

"I'm afraid you go there too much, of late, daughter. I wish you would stay with me today." But his heart relented as he saw the disappointed look which clouded her face for the moment. So he said no more but turned slowly into the mansion to bury his thoughts in the books he so dearly loved.

INDUSTRIAL NOTES

Water power plants, aggregating less than 130,000 horsepower, have been built upon our navigable streams under the general dam acts of 1906 and 1910. President Wilson, Secretary Lane and committees of both houses of Congress, after careful study have announced their belief that new laws are necessary to stimulate waterpower development. Myrtle Point will do much paying this summer.

A 20,000 foot sawmill being built on Willamette-Pacific near Richardson.

Representative of linen interests at Belfast, Ireland, says a large flax mill will be built in Oregon if experiments in flax raising now under way prove successful.

O. W. R. & N. Co. will spend $3,450,000 in addition to regular amount this year, for improvements.

In the past four years wages of railway trainmen increased $70,000,000 and the present demand is for an increase of $100,000,000. Increased rates granted by Interstate Commerce Commission to railroads in 1915 amounted to only $35,000,000.

Eugene—Building permits increased $3,522 over last year.

Grange Meeting.

Beaverton Grange met in their hall last Saturday morning with full attendance. The forenoon was devoted principally to conferring the third and fourth degrees upon Mr. and Mrs. Day and Mrs. M. E. Cricket. A bounteous dinner was served to over 50 people, putting them in a happy state of mind for the interesting "Male Program" that followed.

Afternoon program men only. The Lecturer being sick, Meri Denny filled her place with credit to herself and the delight of the grange.

1. Opening song—Brothers only.
2. Roll call—Witty and humorous quotations.
3. Is man's work on the farm more monotonous than housework?—A. P. Christensen.

6. The frying pan in camp life—J. W. Barnes.
7. German solo—W. F. Desinger.
8. What to do till the doctor comes in: (a) Convulsions, (b) croup, (c) burns, (d) poisoning, (e) fainting—Dr. Paul M. E. Carstens.
9. Necessary implements and their cost for farming 160-acre farm successfully—W. W. Thurston.
10. What phase of grange benefits most appeals to you?—C. E. Hedge.
11. Quartet—Messrs. Tucker, Peck, Desinger and B. Denny.
12. The most interesting place I ever lived in, Beaverton excepted—Bro. Anker.
13. Solo—R. L. Tucker.
14. When and how to spray for Codlin moth—A. V. Denny.
15. Solo, guitar accompaniment—Bro. Peck.

The uppermost question now is "Who gave the better program." Today's program was entirely by the men, not even allowing the ladies to clap their hands. The program in March was by the sisters only, and we have forgotten all the interesting subjects so ably discussed by them.

The grange closed in open session and the usual routine business was transacted, after which grange closed.

SKIN TROUBLES NO LONGER BOTHER BEAVERTON PEOPLE.

Do you feel rather lazy and unfit for work? Do you feel tired, even before your day's work is full accomplished, and at night you are nervous? Then you say you have the spring fever. This is only one of the symptoms resulting from impure blood which generally occurs in the spring. There are times when the condition is more severe. There are then, skin eruptions, boils, pimples, and a condition of the skin known as itch. This is very troublesome and hard to cure, and if allowed to run may cause complications. To cure these disagreeable features is uppermost in every mind, and no household in without its special antidote, old-fashioned remedies, mostly, which require time for operation. NOT SO WITH ARCHES ALTERNATIVES, for this is a quick, sure, and cheap method of treating these conditions. Beaverton People have found this medicine excellent and it is recommended to you by the CITY PHARMACY.
