Rural Credits Measure

Would Help the Farmer

"As it now stands the rural credits constitutional amendment has probably combined within it the wisdom of a larger number of the people than any bill that has been submitted to the people of Oregon since the adoption of the constitution," says Dr. Hector Macpherson, of the O. A. C. Bureau of Organization and Markets, who has been connected with the preparation of the measure.

"The framers of this measure" continues Dr. Macpherson, "claim no honor nor originality in the measure. They have been assemblers of ideas and not originators. They have consulted farmers in all parts of the state, lawyers, bankers, real estate dealers, statisticians and professors of agricultural economics. The amendment aims were absolute safety on the one hand, and reforming the system from those by-land speculators on the other hand. Students of the measure will recognize that the committee has gone the limit in attempting to achieve both these aims."

Copies of the final draft were submitted to rural credit experts of California, Harris Weinstock and Professor Elwood Meade. Professor Meade has had seven years experience as director of a similar but more far reaching system of rural credits in Australia. Both of these experts commend the measure and claim that its adoption will tend to promote the prosperity of the farmers and the agricultural development of Oregon. Mr. Meade hopes that the measure will be the forerunner of further legislation that will authorize state advances to settlers to assist tenant farmers and young people entering on their life work to become land owners.

"What we most need now," concludes Dr. Macpherson, "is volunteers who will give enough time to the movement to get 100 names on the petition within the next few days and then keep up their educational propaganda until they know the bill is passed in November."

Copies may be had of C. E. Spence, Oregon City, or J. D. Brown, Arlington.

The Badger Lumber Company of Hillsboro have bought the remainder of the Beedle and Waite lumber stock and have been busy the past week shipping it to their yards in Hillsboro.
