PLAYED AN UP HILL GAME

The telephone companies of Washington County have been playing an uphill game. September was the month when they put into use a plan to tax the user an extra dime every time he called from one town to another. That was the signal for the removal of a number of farmer's phones and not a few from the town homes.

But the loss of patronage was not the only trouble that followed in the wake of the act. The line through the county from town to town was the property of the Bell system. As soon as the owners of this system found that the local people were charging tolls on this line (and they were not long in finding out,) they put over an order requiring all these messages to go through Portland and Portland operators checked up on the time and put it up to the local companies to collect the tolls. When they advertised a ten cent toll and presented a bill for 25c or 35c or more there was a liberal bit of trouble in store for them and all the profits accruing from the transaction were lost in explaining how it happened. Now we get an inferior service to Hillsboro through Schools and it is stated that the local companies will now build a line of their own through the county.

Business men of Beaverton and Hillsboro can do no better than to co-operate with those of Forest Grove and see to it that the local county toll is put out of business.

The chief value of a telephone in this county is for the purpose of talking from town to town and its value for this purpose is limited to the extent to which phones are in the homes of the people who live in the neighboring towns. Every telephone taken out of a home in the county lessens the value of the telephone to each business man. If the companies need more money, we can easily afford to pay a quarter more each month for a better service. But a telephone in Beaverton just to talk to Beaverton people isn't worth much; it is worth only a little more in Hillsboro or Forest Grove if it can be used just to talk in the local exchange; and if people gain nothing on their long distance calls by having a telephone, they will plan on going to central to do their long distance phoning, with the result that they write a postal card instead of talking on most of their business.

If we want our telephones to be worth full value to us as business-getting features, we must do our part to have the unnecessary county tolls repealed and get the number of telephones on the local exchanges increased to include practically every resident of the county.
