HARRY BARNES Prop.

A CAFETERIA LUNCH

He was tall and kinder slender,
And his face was sort o' lean
He had just come fr in the country
And he was a-looking green.

He went in to get his dinner,
And he sat down in a chair,
Then he waited fo: a waiter,
To come with the bill of fare.

No one seemed to pay attention,
And some could not help but smile
For the place where he was sitting
Twas the cafeteria -tyle.

Someone tapped him on the shoulder,
And they then showed him the way
Where to get his tools for eating,
Also were to get a tray.

Everything looked so inviting
To his un-acustomed eye,
That he helped himself quite freely
To the eats as he passed by.

At the end he ordered coffee
And they passed along a wink
Because his tray was so crowded
There was no space for his drink.

And when he ate all he wanted
On his tray there seemed to be Enough victuals left un-eaten
For the likes of you and me.
