A pretty young woman entered a dry goods store in Beaverton last week and made her wants known to the bashful gentleman clerk as follows: "I want a pair of those elastic bands capable of being elongated and adjusted at pleasure, and used by the feminine portion of mankind for putting around the lower extremities of her locomotive members to keep in proper position and at the required altitude, habiliments of the cloth." The clerk gave up his job and joined a gang of road graders.

MAY CONQUER SAHARA

French to Try New Method of Crossing Desert.

Fairy-Wheel Motors Have Been Tested on Snowy Slopes of Mount Nevada and Left Only Slight Impress.

Paris.—A government expedition will attempt to cross the desert of Sahara from Timbuctou to Tunis in a few months, using a new method of crossing the desert.

Success will mean a great step in the advance of civilization. It would make possible the opening up of vast stretches of the world's desert.

Chine has been eyes on the French expedition, realizing that it would mean to that land of 100 roads and 100 cities.

It would permit the linking up of the French colonies in North Africa with those of equatorial Africa, which has been a long dream.

"I am glad to say that prohibition is successful in the state of New Hampshire because it has closed off the saloons and some of the salaried men have been successful in the fight for prohibition will say that prohibition is as good as they were when the question was asked here."

A Kansas man in Columbus recently attending the meeting of the American Red Cross, was asked by some of the other delegates as to the operation of prohibition in his state. The American home tells the story.

"It is working satisfactorily," was the reply. "You know Kansas has been under prohibition since 1890. For many years the law was not enforced. In fact she had tough sledding the first twenty-five years, in all that time she had to keep up the fight. Now the matter is settled for all time so far as Kansas is concerned. Politicians of both parties know the dry policy is fixed and true words have about quit the struggle."

"Do you know we have hundreds of suicide aged men in Kansas who have been under a doctor. Men might as well try to make these men believe that dogs are a good thing for the state as saloons. They would warm up as quickly to small-pox as to the liquor traffic."

"Out in my state we do not think any more of the man who buys bootleg whisky than we do of the fellow who sells it. They are both ostracized. Neither is considered a good citizen. When a man wants to lose the respect of his fellows, he cannot do it any quicker than to be known as a buyer of bootleg booze."

"Kansas is satisfied with prohibition. You will find the first twenty-five years of enforcement are the hardest," were his parting words.

"Enforcement and cooperation to that end, is an only question. We are not preaching prohibition; the time for that is past. The only thing we ask the people is whether or not they will obey and enforce the constitution of the United States. That is all the breachment of Haynes, that is the voice of the administration from President Harding down, standing upon the platform on which it was elected. America is in jeopardy. The waiting period is always troublesome, but necessary for the welfare of the individual. Drinkers nowadays may be divided into the temporary faddists and those with an appetite established through years of indulgence which they will always strive to satisfy. More than 98 per cent of the liquor sold by bootleggers is poisonous."—Roy A. Haynes, Federal Director of Prohibition Enforcement.

INTEREST IN CHILDREN'S FARM HOME GROWING

The Children's Farm Home Board met in Portland, March 25th. Among other business transacted was the adopting of definite working plans for the laying out and landscaping of the grounds of the selected building site. Plans for the type and architecture of the main building and surrounding cottages were discussed.

Having caught the vision of what a real home life the Cottage system will afford to these homeless waifs, and realizing that a home and the sunshine of mother love is as necessary to the best development of children as is sunshine to the trees and flowers, people all over the state are showing increasing enthusiasm for the project.

This is evidenced by the number of prominent business men who are not only lending the influence of their names but giving of their valuable time to service on campaign committees.

The churches, knowing that what could not be accomplished by any individual church for these homeless ones from protestant families can be done by this great organization, from all churches, and equally with them is devoted to Christian work and ideals, are falling into line and aiding the Home. The Presbyterian church of Independence gave recently a $135 collection and promised to make it $200, the price of one acre of the farm.

Needing more room, the State W. C. T. U. Headquarters, where the Farm Home office is, have been removed to Room 411 Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, where calls, letters and above all CHECKS will be cordially welcomed. A generous check was received from New York City showing that the interest is extending outside the state.

A North Dakota man who raised oats last summer for which he received only fifteen cents per bushel went into a restaurant in Chicago the other day and ordered a dish of oats for his breakfast, paying 25 cents for them. He protested at the bill and told the waiter he would bring his horse feed with him the next time he came to the big windy city.

Made Fortune, Gives Business to Employees

Believing that when a man has amassed a fortune adequate for his personal needs he should retire and give others the benefit of his experience, John Borg, said to have made $2,000,000 in the New York curb market, announced that he is through making money and wants to turn his business over to his employees. Borg began as an office boy at $4 a week, soon after being graduated from the Union Hill High School, at Union Hill, N. J., in 1887.

The Story of Our States

By JONATHAN BRACE XXXVI.—NEVADA

NEVADA is a Spanish name meaning "snow," and is taken from the Sierra Nevada.

These large mountains which separate the State from California. Most of the history of the state concerns in this Western section, near the Sierras, and it is here that all of Nevada's principal cities are located.

The first white man to cross the present state was the Franciscan Monk, Father Garcia, who made his way across the desert in California in 1775. In 1820 Peter S. Ogden discovered the Humboldt river, which in some places called Golden River after him.

The first memorable trip across the state was that by Fremont in 1843, when he went to California at the time of the outbreak of the Mexican war. It was this war which in 1848 resulted in Mexico ceding a large area in the United States, of which Nevada was a part. When this was organized into territories, the Territory of Utah extended to California. The Western inhabitants, however, were left to their own resources and successfully organized their own government. Resenting the idea of Utah they petitioned to be annexed to California.

In 1850 the Comstock lode was discovered and Nevada and its own mining boom. Population immediately grew by leaps and bounds and in 1861 Nevada was formed into a separate territory. Later, portions of Utah were added and the lower part of the state was taken from Arizona.

Petitions for statehood were made but it was not until 1864 that Nevada became the thirty-sixth state of the Union.

Though Nevada ranks sixth in size with its area of 110,694 square miles, it has the smallest population of any of the 48 states. Between 1890 and 1930 there was a marked decrease in the population due to the falling off in the mining industry.

CARTOONIST'S EARLY HISTORY

Those who have followed to a greater or less extent, during the past ten years, the adventures of "Polly and Her Pal" might be interested in a brief personal history of the author of the production, Clifford Sterrett. Miss Sallie Johnson, for years Miss Johnson was librarian at Alexandria, and, consequently Cliff was compelled to spend many an hour at the public library in the custody of his devoted aunt. From about the age of five years he began to develop remarkable aptitude for drawing pictures of various kinds. The writer well remembers one occasion, while sitting behind the library table, he drew the picture of a brass band, dispensing music on a country village street. Each of the players and his instrument was clearly set forth with remarkable accuracy and clearness, standing as they were, in a circle with the customary crowd of the village boys gathered about, drinking in the home-town music.

But as a baby and young boy Cliff Sterrett's long, yellow, curly locks of hair, for a number of years, attracted more attention than did any natural ability the boy possessed. In school he was considered hardly an average student and if I remember correctly he never graduated from the high school. Neither was he considered unusually original nor resourceful, and it has always been a little bit of a mystery to those who know him how he succeeded in climbing the comic cartoonist's ladder of fame as he has.—Harold Granville.

CIVIC DUTY SHARED BY ALL

Cultivation and Spread of Public Spirit and of Christianity Must Not Be Evaded.

Civic responsibility, when the qualifying age is reached, rests on all alike. Furthermore, the notion of one's public duty has during the last few years broadened considerably. Young and old are learning that voting, though a serious and weighty affair, is but one small part of a citizen's duty.

A citizen's business is to mind the law and help to see that others mind it.

A citizen's business is to be a good neighbor, to pay his debts, to collaborate in works of neighborhood benefit, to assist effort for the general social welfare.

He has not done enough when he has made himself rich. He may build himself a house of great costliness and beauty. He may surround himself with the appurtenances of ease and leisure. These things are legitimate rewards of honest, earnest toil.

But if he is a good citizen, he cares not merely to have, but to share.

Children taught to be unselfish in their games and diligent in their studies have laid their primary and fundamental lesson in citizenship.

The habits they acquire, of industry and generosity, will make them in mature years, beloved and respected, as examples of public spirit, and of patriotism.—Philadelphia Ledger.

DANTE'S INFERNO OUTDONE IN ARMENIA

Walls of Starving Children Assail the Ears of Relief Workers at Erivan.

The tragic progression of famine conditions in Armenia is strikingly shown in the personal reports brought back by State Director J. S. Maudsaler of the Near East Relief. It is vividly that section in Armenia, and in the letters that he has received at intervals since.

"When I was there in the late summer," said Mr. Maudsaler, "conditions were truly appalling, despite the fact that the orphanages were filled to their utmost capacity. Everything possible was being done. I myself selected a little baby girl with nineteen others from among hundreds of starving children to fill the only possible vacancies in the orphanage at Erivan at that time. However, the weather was warm, and the refugees could manage in some way to keep alive. Reports from Erivan in late September told of the coming of the cold weather, and how the reserves were drawn upon for the opening of additional soup-kitchens. Starving men, women and children from all sections were flocking separately to the Near East Relief stations in the hope of getting work, food and clothing. Two months later, under date of Nov. 26, we have news of the frightful situation that followed. This news came to Dr. Esther Lurvey, of Portland, Oregon, who is national chairman of the American Women's Hospitals, from Dr. Mabel Elliott, in charge of the American Women's Hospitals in the Near East section. This organization is co-operating with the Near East Relief, and is handling the medical work of the latter at Erivan. He is an excerpt from Dr. Mabel Elliott's letter to Dr. Lurvey:

"I cannot begin to tell you, doctor, of the misery here to spite of the enormous amount of work being done. Since I have been here 432 is the lowest number of cases we have had in our hospitals at any one time, and yet they are dying on all corners of the city. Last Sunday we went out in our horseback to see how things were beyond the town; we passed a dead horse by the side of the road, and three wretched human beings were sitting beside it, taking the flesh off with their hands. It was a most repulsive sight."

"All day long you can hear the groans and wails of little children outside our building in hopes we can and will pick them up. If the sun shines for a little while they quiet down, and then when it rains they begin again. One day the rain turned into snow and it was awful to listen to them. The note of terror that came into the general wall was distinctly perceptible, although my room was upstairs and the window was closed. They well know what a single night out in the snow would mean to them. We are picking them up as fast as possible."

"You can see by my report how many more patients we have than beds, and the same holds good in the orphanages. There is no use crowding them in so that they will all die."
