AMERICAN STANDARDS WINNING

The Ladies Home Journal has an able editorial entitled "Quicksands of Filth," that will find a hearty response in every American home.
It shows that dirty plays, dirty movies, and dirty books have not done well, and that the public still demands what is clean and wholesome.
The big theatrical successes of the season are plays that the most exacting parents would not hesitate to take their children to see.
Movies that are sufficiently clean to pass any blue law censorship draw the largest houses and are thought back to be run over and over.
Plays that omitted to emphasize and purify any degenerate or morbid sex motives, and show homely American virtues on the screen get houses.
Clean stuff in the legitimate drama and on the screen that is hugely successful is distinctively American and bears no foreign label or taint.
The reeking orientalism that has been made such a feature of the attraction movies, and that is dragged in to so many of them, is worn stuff.
The caterers to American audiences might as well understand that control and direction of American entertainment is not going back to paganism, but set up its respects to all the deencies and old-fashioned standards of purity vital to honest men and women.
We may love a little jazzing and rough stuff at times for breaking the monotony of life but for a steady diet Americans are distinctly anti-jazz.
Theaters, publishers and film manufacturers might as well understand this and re-learning it through their pocketbooks, a thrilling education.
There is a theory that the great mass of the American people can be set up on anything that has a given percentage of artistic nastiness in it.
So books, plays, movies and a certain type of periodicals have been manufactured along profit-seeking lines that are happily going bankrupt.
They will always be people with easy money and curiosity to make a brief golden harvest for the caterers to various forms of degeneracy.
The American people could deport shiploads of this stuff and not suffer any necessary enjoyment, and cutting their cash in the home will start them.
Publishing will cut the food of profits from their rotten plays and their rotten books and their rotten movies says the Ladies Home Journal.
The blood of our country is not yet continentalized—it is still substantially American and we have no palates for further displays of fetal orientalism.
The breath of new mown hay from the farms sweeps into our towns and cities, and is preferable to French perfumes and our old-fashioned Colonial decorations are more beautiful than broiled interiors.
