

We have been requested to explain how the electoral voters of a state are chosen. Here it is: Each state is entitled to as many presidential electors as it has senators and representatives in congress. Therefore, as far as the latter part of the basis is concerned, the number of electors is in proportion to the population of each state; but the rule of one elector for each United States senator has, of course, no relation to population, as each state is entitled to but two senators. For every 173,900 inhabitants each state is entitled to a representative. The number of representatives in congress is usually increased in making the reapportionment after each census and the number of electors increases with them. The admission of new states also increases the number of electors. The electors are chosen as the legislature of each state directs. Since 1860 it has been the general practice to select them by vote of the people upon a general ticket, each elector being chosen by the vote of his whole state. An exception occurred in Colorado in 1876, when the electors were chosen by the legislature. Michigan is now the only state that varies from the common practice. A recent Act of the Michigan legislature directs that the voters in each of the twelve congressional districts shall choose one presidential elector. The state is also divided into two electoral districts, each comprising six congressional districts, and the voters of each electoral district are to choose one of the two additional electors to which that state is entitled. Besides Oregon's two senators there are two representatives, therefore we are entitled to four electoral voters who will help to elect a president on November 8th.

The Tammany Society was organized April 30, 1789, within a fortnight after the inauguration of Washington. It obtained a charter in 1805. It is composed of democrats, and is the most compact and powerful political organization in the country. Tammany has 9588 offices and jobs to give out in New York city, with an annual pay-roll of $10,123,887. Between two and three per cent of this is collected for the society's campaign fund, yielding about $250,000 this year for election purposes from salaries alone. These figures show why Tammany does not care much who runs the government, so long as it can retain control of New York. Its defection to any great extent would beyond doubt seriously imperil the democratic presidential ticket in New York. The leaders of Tammany have renewed the pledge which they gave long before the convention met that they would loyally support Cleveland should he instead of Hill receive the nomination. Richard Crocker, the head man of the organization, says: "We will support Cleveland just as heartily as we would have supported Hill. We are Democrats, and when we are for a man, we are for him. Why should any one doubt our loyalty to the ticket?"

A great many persons seem to be in doubt as to the exact meaning of the Force bill. The force bill was the so-called Federal elections bill introduced in the Fifty-first Congress by Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts. It provided for the federal regulation of elections, and would have deprived the States of their right to hold Congressional elections through their own officers. It was regarded as unconstitutional and a blow at local self-government, and it was finally defeated by the Democrats, although it had been passed at the first session by the House.

The republicans who say Harrison cannot be elected, and the democrats who say the same about Cleveland, should get together and agree upon a program, in order to relieve the fearful suspense of the country.

The coming presidential contest will be one of the hottest on record. Protection, free trade, reciprocity and every phase of the tariff question and other national issues will be discussed in every city, town and hamlet from Maine to California and from the northern boundary of the republic to the sun-kissed shores of the Gulf of Mexico. The whole country is aroused and the interest is already at white heat. Now is the time to subscribe for the GLOBE if you want to keep posted on the reliable news.

An extra census bulletin recently issued shows that the size of families has been steadily decreasing for a number of years. In 1850 the average size of families was 5.50 persons, 5.28 in 1860, 5.09 in 1870, 5.05 in 1880 and in 1890 it had gotten down to 4.94.

Doubtless the children of the families of the two presidential candidates are very interesting, but not more so than millions of others never heard of in the papers. By all means let's give the children a rest during this campaign.

The senate last week passed the bill granting the world's fair at Chicago $500,000. An amendment closing the fair on Sundays was adopted, as was also one prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Queen Victoria is an amateur artist of talent. Her drawing of $2,000,000 a year from the British treasury is her most conspicuous work—Boston Globe.
