

THE CONDON GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PAPER OF GILLIAM COUNTY, OREGON.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER, 29, 1895.

AN ABUSED PRIVILEGE.

The San Francisco Chronicle estimates that if Durrant is ever made pay the penalty for the murder of which he has been convicted, at least one and a half years may elapse before the final sentence of the court can be carried out. This delay is made possible by the time allowed by the statutes of California for hearing motions for new trials, preparing and filing briefs, submitting argument, etc. Such delays, when it is considered that the death penalty is inflicted, not so much as a punishment for the specific crime for which the condemned is deprived of his life, as it is to prevent other crimes, have caused a growing feeling that society would be benefited, and the cause of justice promoted, if motions for new trials in criminal cases were prohibited. It is a notorious fact that a very large majority of the motions for new trials are made on frivolous ground and for the purpose of thwarting justice. It is unreasonable to believe that errors which are vital to the rights of the accused, are of common occurrence; but it is the rule where conviction is had that a motion for new trial is entered, and it must be admitted that courts are far too ready to grant them, more as a matter of habit than because there is sufficient cause for such action. So common has this become in some states that it is often said when a criminal is convicted, his trial has only begun. And so many culprits have escaped deserved punishment through the granting of new trials, the society is justified in protesting against the practice.

The Indiana judge who overruled a motion for a new trial in a murder case recently presented the matter in a clear light. "If it be true," he pointed out, that upon such a motion the judge must weigh the evidence and determine the facts as did the jury, and if he fails to reach the same conclusion upon some material fact and grants a new trial, there is nothing gained by submitting it to a jury in the first instance. The idea of thus discrediting and reversing the verdict of a jury," he declared, "is in conflict with the idea, confirmed by the wisdom and experience of centuries, that trial by jury is the surest and the safest method of administering justice." The theory of the jury system is that the verdict of 12 good and honest men, after they have carefully weighed the evidence, is as liable to be right as can be expected, but this theory is repudiated every time a new trial is granted. There are cases where errors are so flagrant that new trials are justified, but such cases are not of common occurrence, but the exceptions are few to the rule that the verdicts of juries in criminal cases are correct.

Gov. Lord as a Vetoer.

The following dispatch from Salem appeared in Monday's Oregonian:

The sheriffs of Oregon have a grievance against Gov. Lord and against the state at large. The act on the part of the governor in vetoing the sheriff's mileage bill, and, judging from the expressions of sheriffs who have visited Salem recently, the feeling against the governor is shared by all. A valley sheriff says that Gov. Lord drove the nails in his own coffin when he vetoed the mileage bill. Of the 32 sheriffs now in office, he estimates that one-half will be re-elected, and the other half and the deputies of all, this sheriff claims, will be on hand at the next nominating convention, and they will use every influence to prevent the renomination of the present governor.

Another sheriff says the state is imposing on the sheriffs in asking them to carry requisitions into states for the return of violators of the law, and refusing reimbursements, further than necessary expenses. This sheriff is in favor of all assigning their claims, and instituting suit against the state for such claims. Another says Combs did not ask for any too much for bringing prisoners from Grant county, adding:

"Of course, I would not have subscribed to the oath Combs did, but the state is pressing us, and we never get too much from the state."

Says The Policy Holders Are All Right.

The following line from E. L. Giltner, late secretary and manager and now receiver of the State Insurance company, is self-explanatory and deserves attention:

"The policy holders are advised not to sacrifice their policies by delivering them to other agents, or placing their risks elsewhere, until the receiver can determine the exact condition of the State Insurance company and adopt ways and means to protect the policy holders to the extent possible with the assets of the company."

"Negotiations are now going on with one of the largest companies in the United States, with a view to protecting policy holders of the State Insurance company upon very favorable terms."
